BONE FOOD

Soft and crooked bones mean bad feeding. Call the disease rickets if you want to. The growing child must eat the right food for growth. Bones must have bone food, blood must have blood food and so on through the list.

Scott's Emulsion is the right treatment for soft bones in children. Little doses every day give the stiffness and shape that healthy bones should have.

Bow legs become straighter, loose joints grow stronger and firmness comes to the soft heads.

Wrong food caused the trouble. Right food will cure it. In thousands of cases Scott's Emulsion has proven to be the right food for soft bones in childhood.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Elizabeth Gardien passed away in death at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Mark Elkinton, at Brownsville last Thursday afternoon after attaining the age of 75 years and 7 months. For the last few years her general health was very poor. She was a most highly respected old lady and her deeds of kindness will be remembered long after she has turned to dust. Her husband, Francis Gardien, preceded her in death fifteen years ago. She was a resident of the town of Wayne for nearly fifty years, living on a farm, but for the last six years she has been living with her children in Lomira and Brownsville. She leaves to mourn her demise six children and thirty-three grand-children. The children are Emanuel and Frank, of Lomira, Mary Ellen, (Mrs. M. Elkinton) of Brownsville, Lizzie, (Mrs. Oscar Ward) of Fond du Lac, Annie, (Mrs. Ambrose Donnelly) of Olivia, Minn., Katie, (Mrs. John Clark) of this village. The funeral was held Sunday at 11 o'clock with interment in the St. Kilian cemetery. Rev. Burlbach officiating. May she rest in peace.

Weak?

"I suffered terribly and was extremely weak for 12 years. The doctors said my blood was all turning to water. At last I tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and was soon feeling all right again." Mrs. J. W. Fiala, Hadiyme, Ct.

No matter how long you have been ill, nor how poorly you may be today, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine you can take for purifying and enriching the blood.

Don't doubt it, put your whole trust in it, throw away everything else.

Ask your doctor what he thinks of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. He knows all about the standard medicine. Follow his advice and you will be satisfied. J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass.

Weekly Crop Bulletin.

[For the week ending Monday, May 11.]

The weather conditions during the past week have been very favorable for farm work, and while copious rains occurred generally over the interior of the State early in the week, there was no serious interference with farm work and the seeding of spring grains, which is now generally completed. The week was decidedly cool, with light frosts in many portions of the central and northern sections until near the close, when a rapid rise in temperature occurred, the maximum temperature on Sunday being as high as 80 degrees or over at many stations. There was practically no damage from the frosts, as vegetation is generally not sufficiently advanced to be liable to injury. The warm weather during the past few days has caused vegetation to advance rapidly and fruit trees, especially in the southern counties, are in full bloom.

Farmers have made very satisfactory progress in the work of preparing for corn and potatoes, the soil being reported in excellent condition, especially on well drained land. Low lands are still too wet to admit of plowing. Some corn was planted in a few localities in the southern section during the latter part of the week but generally there is still considerable work to be done on the land.

Winter wheat and rye made very substantial growth during the week. The plants are generally healthy, strong and of good color.

Early sown oats and barley are through the ground and generally in good condition. There is some complaint of seed rotting on low land on account of the continued cold, wet weather, but the damage from this source is not considered serious.

Pastures have made very rapid progress during the past few days, and in some localities stock has been turned out. Generally farmers are well supplied with dry feed and prefer to allow pastures to attain a good growth before turning on the stock.

Tobacco plants are reported in good condition.

Topics of the Times.

An omnivorous reader down in Kentucky wrote to Senator Deboe for a copy of every public document issued since the government was established. "I'm sorry," answered Deboe, "but all the freight cars hereabouts are busy."

Provo, a village near Salt Lake City, has a woman with the distinction of having 219 living descendants. She is 92 years old, and has seven children, seventy-three grandchildren, 135 great-grandchildren and four great-great-grandchildren.

The fruit of the unguano tree of South Africa yields a strong intoxicating drink for the natives. A traveler says elephants are also fond of it, and often become quite tipsy, staggering about, playing antics, screaming so as to be heard for miles and having tremendous fights.

A young matron of Germantown, Pa., went to a corner grocery and said: "Let me have a package of Saratoga chips." The clerk replied: "Sorry, but we've only got straight kumlin' in bunches." And he exhibited a circular bundle of little sticks, tipped on the ends with resin. "Won't these do?" he asked.

Nate Salisbury and "Bill" Nye were great friends. When the humorist first engaged in newspaper work, and took a house on Staten Island, the showman went to dinner with him. Nye exploded some new stories, and Salisbury, turning to his host's little girl, said: "Very clever papa you've got, my dear."

"Yes," responded the demure little miss, "when there's company."

To Colorado in 1903.

The Passenger Department of the Chicago & North-Western Railway has issued a very interesting folder, giving information as to reduced rates and sleeping car service, with a short description of the various points of interest in Colorado usually visited by tourists, these excursion rates applying on account of the Christian Endeavor meeting to be held at Denver, July 9th to 13th. Send 2 cent stamp for copy to W. B. Kniskern, Passenger Traffic Manager, Chicago.

The Wastes of the Body.

Every seven days the blood, muscles and bones of a man of average size loses two pounds of without tissue. This waste cannot be replenished until the health and strength kept up without perfect digestion. When the stomach and digestive organs fail to perform their functions, the strength lets down, health gives way, and disease sets up. Kodol's Peppermint Cure enables the stomach and digestive organs to digest and assimilate all of the wholesome food that may be eaten into the kind of blood that rebuilds the tissues and protects the health and strength of the mind and body. Kodol's Indigestion, Dyspepsia and all stomach troubles. It is an ideal spring tonic. Sold by all druggists.

RED BERRIES AND WHITE.

"I hope it may be so, uncle," he said; "but for the life of me I cannot shake off the feeling that something is about to happen. What, I have not the least idea, but that there will be something unusual, I feel convinced."

"Maybe the wind has been blowing about with the bell of the New Church, as it is called," replied his uncle; "it is built far too open for such an exposed position, and the dreary eastern blasts would soon set the bells in motion. Who knows what the wind is doing?"

"Well, let us hope your idea is a correct one," said Dick. "It would be a relief to all if everything went right tonight, whether the bells ring or not. But here comes Miss Easton. She is my partner for the next dance."

And yet as he passed his arm round the fair girl's waist he felt as if he were but of Cora he was thinking.

In the intervals of the dances, Reuben kept a sharp look out on Ernest Walton. They talked and yet did not seem to be talking, for the girl's eyes were fixed on the man who was wearing Richard's coat. As if by common accord, paused and looked at each other.

It showed that in the hearts of most of them the jollity and mirth were fictitious, and that in reality the warning of the hidden bells had stricken deep into them.

The chimes had scarcely died away when the riot of the bells began.

They jangled and rattled wild discordant music, drowning every other sound. It was a sound that was not to be heard down, the bells became less distinct. Silence fell on the old house.

Then before the company had time to give a sigh of relief, a loud clang came; the cry of a human being in pain—then a shout for help.

As Gladys looked round in dismay, she saw a man with a deadly heaviness at his heart, that Reuben, Dick, and Ernest Walton were absent.

Then, in a moment after, the latter rushed into the room crying:

"Quick, follow me, some of you. Richard and Ernest have been murdered!"

CHAPTER IV.

LINKS WITH THE PAST.

The Squire and Ernest Walton, followed by several of the most intimate friends of the family, hastened from the room, the women, with one or two exceptions, being kept back. Gladys would not have been restrained even if they had attempted to prevent her going. At the open door of the largest anteroom she found a number of guests gazing with horrified eyes at something in the hall.

Then with a catch of the breath, she pushed her way through, and saw what the something was.

In the centre of the floor lay Richard Fernleigh, in his Robin Hood dress, stabbed to the heart—the dagger still sticking in his face. His mask was off, and his face was white with the ghastly whiteness of death.

Knelt by his side was Squire Fernleigh—also unmasked—his features set by a stony horror. Ernest Walton stood near with mask still on, apparently grief-stricken and speechless.

Rushing to the side of the senseless man, Gladys knelt down near her father, who she always called the Squire.

"Oh! Father," she cried, in tones of horror, "it cannot be that Dick is dead. Where is Dr. Lunley—he is here some-where?"

As she spoke a tall figure in evening dress pushed through the crowd, and went down on one knee by the side of the victim.

"One moment's examination was enough," he said, "and the doctor: 'He must have died instantly.'"

"Do not let the dagger be removed!" said Ernest Walton.

"No," replied the doctor, "looking strangely at the masked speaker; 'It should remain where it is until the arrival of the police. Its removal would not affect the victim one way or the other.'"

Tenderly Dick was raised and placed on a couch, and all but the Squire and Gladys withdrew. Ernest Walton hurried off to send for the police.

While this was being done, the women hurried to their rooms, while the men hastened to take off their fancy costumes. They would be a mockery of death, and, as for supper, the idea was abandoned.

Reuben, after one look into the death-chamber, had disappeared from the scene.

As the guests raised the inanimate form of the victim on the carpet, a large bunch of mistletoe was seen dabbled in the blood.

Dick had evidently clutched it, as he retained the blow, and it did not fall. And there they lay—red berries and white; but the red was the red of blood, and the white the white of the symbol of joy and happiness!

As the police appeared, the chimes at Fernleigh New Church began to ring out over the city.

As the Squire, breaking down thoroughly, buried his face in his hands and wept bitterly.

When the constables entered the room, his head was on Gladys's shoulder, and his arms were clasped tenderly round him.

Nothing but a superficial examination of the place could be made at such a moment, and no clue whatever could be discovered. The only thing of interest was the dagger, which the Squire, for the moment, could not be deprived of.

One constable was left in charge of the room, and one was placed on the terrace, one also taking charge of the front entrance.

"Lawyer Casson" was one of the first to bid adieu to the Squire.

"Good night, my friend," he said; "try to bear this burden bravely."

"Bravely!" I lose all one by one," said Sir George, in a weary voice.

The Spanish government has revived the regulation requiring all foreigners resident in or visiting Spain to register their names at their consulates.

It proved only that one of the gypsies had made his way from the encampment to the house there.

But who was it? There were so many gypsies that it was impossible on such slender proof to arrive at any conclusion.

All that the superintendent could do was to warn the Romanies that they must not attempt to leave the neighborhood without the mystery of the murder was cleared up.

The police sustained their first defeat here.

Not one of the gypsies—male or female—expressed the slightest fear or objection.

One and all professed the most profound respect for the law, and, in fact, it was well known that they were very friendly to them. Ernest Walton, the one who first discovered the crime—was, of course, the principal witness.

He said that he had left his partner for a few minutes to go to get a brandy and soda, and when he saw someone rush by him and then stop short at the door of the ante-room. This person he knew to be Richard's partner, the Spaniard of the old time. He was masked, and therefore he (Walton) was unable to distinguish his features.

"The man who was first discovered," said Walton, "as I thought that it was some drunk's rendezvous; but I had no sooner drunk my brandy and soda, and was returning toward a piercing cry for help."

"I at once ran to the room, and saw my cousin Richard lying beneath the chandelier, and Reuben in a chair. I rushed to the bathroom, and alarmed the guests. You have been told the remainder of the sad story."

The question now was, who was the Spaniard's friend?

Only three people in the court—Gladys Fernleigh, Mr. Casson, the solicitor, and Reuben—were in a position to hear this evidence against him; but he bore up bravely.

"Who is to prove anything against me?" he asked. "There is only Gladys who saw me in that costume, and Mr. Casson. The latter would not, in his own interest, start such a mad story. I am a man of honor, and I am not to be accused by love. All I must do is to keep silent, and wait upon events."

The inquiry was adjourned for a week, and Reuben, in the meantime, was kept busy with the police superintendent in a call court if any evidence of importance was able to be brought forward.

The hidden bells had ceased their discordant jangling, the wind had died down, and the old man, now that the mystery of the murder was left to the silent mystery of death.

On the morning of the fourth day—that before the funeral—the Squire was surprised to find a visitor in the hall. He greeted him very heartily, though he could not for the life of him imagine the meaning of the mysterious words which he had uttered.

It was of this that the lawyer first spoke, when they sat down in the baronet's study.

"I have no doubt you were surprised at my remark the other night, Sir George," he said, "but I had a serious reason for saying that you were a man of honor, and I am not to be accused by love. All I must do is to keep silent, and wait upon events."

AUTOMOBILE LAWN MOWER.

How it Works on the Capitol Grounds at Washington.

With the march of progress Washington is right up in the front rank with the automobile had passed from the experimental and become an established fact Washington took it up in earnest, and today there is no city in the country that possesses so many of these marvels of the Twentieth century as the capital.

While a good thing comes along Washington is quick to take advantage of it, and from pleasure vehicles of the auto class to mechanical appliances with the same motive power was but a short step. Therefore the moving of the several hundred acres of lawn that surround the capitol was considerable of a problem, and many men were annually engaged in the work. From April to October they were kept busy with mowers, scythes and sickles, and there was no time when the entire grounds were clothed with an even coat of grass. This is no longer a fact, for the automobile has taken its place in the grounds of the capitol and pushes and pulls a regulation revolving lawn mower all over the place.

The engine that drives the blades has the general appearance of a small asphalt roller, except that all of the metal work that makes up the machine is painted a bright red color, and the appearance of a small fire engine. On the front seat is room for two men, and beside the engine are levers that control the engine and enable him to operate it in any direction as quickly as a man can turn a hand mower. The rider is a small roller that trails along behind the revolving blades. The work is arranged so that the blades are pushed as a man with a sickle. The speed of the machine while in operation is several times as fast as could be accomplished by a hand-rolling lawn mower. DOCTOR ENSOR

SUPT. SOUTH CAROLINA STATE INSTITUTION.

Endorses the Catarrhal Tonic Pe-ru-na--

A Congressman's Letter.

Dr. J. F. Ensor, Postmaster of Columbia, S. C., late Superintendent and Physician in charge of State Insane Asylum at Columbia, S. C., writes:

"After using your Peruna myself for a short period, and my family having used and are now using the same with good results, and upon the information of others who have been benefited by it as a cure for catarrh and an invigorating tonic, I can cheerfully recommend it to all persons requiring so effective a remedy."—Dr. J. F. Ensor.

Hon. C. W. Batts, ex-Member of Congress from North Dakota, in a letter from Washington, D. C., says:

"That Peruna is not only a vigorous, as well as an effective, remedy for catarrh, but it is already established by its use by the thousands who have been benefited by its use. I cannot too highly express my appreciation of its excellence."—C. W. Batts.

Dr. R. Robbins, Muskogee, I. T., writes:

"Peruna is the best medicine I know of for catarrh, and to strengthen a weak stomach and to give appetite. Beside prescribing it for catarrh, I have ordered it for weak and debilitated people, and have not had a patient but said it helped him. It is an excellent medicine and it fits so many cases."

"I have a large practice, and have a chance to prescribe your Peruna. I hope you may live long to do good to the sick and suffering."

"One of the obscure causes of weakness and the one often overlooked is catarrh. It is an inflammation of the mucous membrane and causes the blood plasma to escape through the mucous membrane in the form of mucus. This discharge of mucus is the same as the loss of blood. It produces weakness."
