—A newspaper makes enemies. A single unfortunate line may wipe out the already faint recollection of a hundred nice things it may have said about a man; a single failure to be guided by the judgement of a citizen instead of his own conscience may make that citizen the editor's enemy, regardless of the years during which the paper may have contributed to the advancement of the person and even though a paper may have been a leading factor in booming its town, this service may instantly be forgotten if it offends once in disregarding the ideas of some act or policy. The wonder therefore, must not be as to the number of enemies a newspaper has, but as to his friends being so many. That a newspaper of character has many friends, surely is a tribute to the intelligence of its readers, who are broad enough to realize that one may occasionally err yet be worthy of confidence. Realizing this, the sensible newspaper man goes ahead.

—A small boy who lived in an important railroad center had been accustomed to visiting the station and making friends with the officers of the company. He persuaded his aunt to play train with him one day. He arranged the chairs in line then said: "You'll be the engineer and I'll be conductor, lend me your watch and get into the cab." He then hurried down the platform, timepiece in hand "Pull out, you red headed, pie faced jay," he shouted at the astonished young woman. "Whv, Willie!" she exclaimed in amazement. "That's right, chew the rag," he retorted. "Pull out. We are five minutes late already."

—A funny story about a physician is going the rounds. A resident of the town set out four shade trees for the doctor. A short time later the physician was called to attend the mother-in-law of the man who set out the trees. The old lady died and the physician presented his bill. After paying it the citizen thought of the trees and made out and presented a bill for them. "But the trees died," protested the doctor. "So did my mother-in-law," replied the man. The doctor paid the bill.

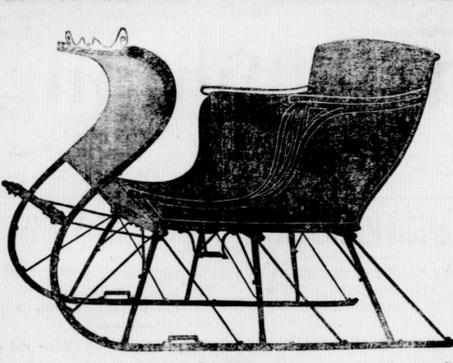

—You can always tell whether a man is married or single when you see him go through a screen door. If he is married he approaches the door cautiously, glances nervously around, then takes off his hat and swipes it up and down the door two or three times. He then quietly opens the door about two or three inches, squeezes through and closes it with a quick snap. The length of time he has been married may be determined by the degree of ear and nervousness indicated in his countenance.

—A man entered a restaurant, took a seat and after a little deliberation asked the waiter for a plate of fly specks. The waiter reported the uncomplimentary request to the proprietor, who approached the customer and informed him that they did not serve fly specks. "Then," was the reply, "I would suggest that you take them off the bill of fare."

—A few days ago a rather bashful young woman went into a store carrying three chickens. She inquired the price of chickens and at the same time put them on the counter. The clerk didn't know the chickens' feet were tied, and if they would lay there. She bit her handkerchief and said: "No, sir, they are roosters."

—A teacher in explaining the different kinds of sentences to her class asked what it would be if she said, "I am looking for a man." "I don't know," said the boy at the foot of the class, "but I guess it would be the truth."

For instance—Your kitchen clock stops suddenly some night, without the least warning. You can't coax it to go. It's on a strike.

Now, it is plain that there are only two things to be done—lay the old clock aside for good and all, or let us fix it for you.

Of course, in some cases a new clock is preferable—but the right thing to do would be to let our repair department decide what is best to be done. We mean the best from your way of looking at it.

More than likely a cleaning, a renewal of a worn part, and a little general adjusting would put new life into the old timepiece. Bring it to us.
