FARMERS MEETING TO BE BIG EVENT

The farmers' meeting, sponsored by a committee of local people, which will be held at the Kewaskum Opera House on Friday afternoon, Feb. 17, 1922, will be the biggest and most educational farmers' meeting ever held in this section of Washington county. Several prominent speakers of state wide reputation will be present, who will give some very interesting and educational talks. One of the purposes of the meeting is to bring together a better understanding between the farmers and the businessmen. As a man prominent in agricultural activities once said: "Get acquainted with your neighbor, you might like him." Believing this statement to be true and knowing that every one can learn by getting ideas from others, County Agent Milton Butten, with the assistance of a local committee have planned a farm meeting to be held here on Friday, Feb. 17, at 1:30 o'clock. The following program has been arranged: "Culling the Poultry Flock"; "Profitable Egg Production" by J. B. Hayes who is one of the University of Wisconsin's poultry experts. "The Filled Milk Law," by Senator Herman Bilgrien. We are fortunate to secure two such good speakers for this meeting. Mr. Hayes is recognized as one of the leading poultry experts of Wisconsin. Senator Herman Bilgrien should need no introduction to you. Senator Bilgrien fathered and promoted the Filled Milk Law in the Wisconsin legislature. He will tell us of the unfair competition of coconut oil with our butter fat and will explain to us methods whereby we can fight this unfair competition. This meeting should be of as much interest to the ladies as to the men and they are cordially invited to attend. Plan to attend and learn to know your neighbor, and carry away new ideas on successful farming practices.

SELLS CHEESE FACTORY John Kleinschay, who for a number of years was owner and successfully conducted the cheese factory near the Aug. F. Kirchner homestead, about two and one-half miles southwest of this village, sold the factory last week Thursday to Arthur Trapp of Beechwood. Mr. Trapp has been engaged in the cheese making business for a number of years and understands the business thoroughly. He will take possession on February 15. We wish him success in his new field of occupation. Mr. Kleinschay is yet undecided as to what he will do in the future, his intentions at present are to retire from the cheese making business and expects to move his household furniture to this village where he will make his future home.

ALUMINUMS WIN FROM RANDOMLAKE

In a hard fought game, the Kewaskum Aluminum basket ball team defeated the Random Lake team here Sunday by a score of 17 to 29. The visitors came here with the help of two Por Washington basket ball stars and with this additional help were able to give the locals a hard rub. Spatz Miller had his day on, being successful in caging most of the baskets for the locals. At the beginning of the game it looked as though the visitors would go down to an overwhelming defeat, as their chances of coming anywhere near scoring seemed almost hopeless. During the course of play, however, the Random Lake team settled down to some real hard playing and were successful in breaking through the local's defense and caged several pretty field goals. The first half ended 6 to 13 in favor of the locals. The second half opened with the locals scoring enough points to put the game on ice, after which several shifts in the local lineup were made. The game was exciting from start to finish. Random Lake sure has the makings of a good basket ball team, and with a little more experience will be in a position to give many of the stronger teams of this vicinity a stiff argument.

Tomorrow (Sunday) afternoon, comes the real test for the season to all fans of this community, when the locals will clash with the Oshkosh P'Gosh squad, the strongest team that has so far made its appearance in the local court this year. The Oshkosh team is an entire professional team, composed of a galaxy of state-wide professional basket ball stars. Mr. Steckbauer, Manager of the P'Gosh team, has notified manager Rosenheimer to get together the strongest lineup possible, for he is coming here loaded for bear, with the intentions of getting revenge for the defeat handed his team here last year. Our boys feel sure they can hold his aggregation down to a close score, and if he breaks in the game are in anyway in their favor, the Steckbauer aggregation is liable to be sent home with another defeat dangling from their belt. Don't miss this game for it will be a hummer.

HIGH SCHOOL WINS In a rather loose but hard fought game, the Kewaskum high school defeated the Campbellsport high school on the local floor last Friday evening by a score of 4 to 23, thereby making good their intentions in getting revenge over the defeat handed them at Campbellsport several weeks ago. The visitors had no chance of winning at any stage of the game, for the locals gained a safe lead at the start and were never in danger of losing. Quade and Marx were the main point getters for the locals.

INTERESTING LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA

The Statesman is in receipt of a very interesting letter mailed to us from Orange, California, and dated January 31, 1922. The letter was sent by W. W. Parsons, a former resident of the town of Auburn, residing near Five Corners, where he is still remembered by many of the older settlers of that vicinity. Mr. Parsons was induced to write a letter to the Statesman after having received a copy of the paper, under date of January 7th, by some unknown person, and which contained an article on the death of the late William Pool of New Cassel, a school mate of Mr. Parsons. We take pleasure in publishing the letter which reads as follows:

Orange, Cal., Jan. 31, 1922. The Kewaskum Statesman, Kewaskum, Wisconsin Gentlemen: "Today's mail brings me a copy of your paper of Jan. 7th date, evidently sent me by some old friend (unknown) and doubtless sent to call attention to the recent death of William Pool of New Cassel. The notice mentioned stars the memory and brings recollections of the far-distant past, touching pioneer days in old Wisconsin. Among the earliest recollections of the writer is "Billy" Pool, as we always knew and called him. He was among my first schoolmates, and I well remember that in the winter of 1859-60 we attended school together at New Fane (Five Corners), he being what we called one of the "big boys" while I was one of the least. E. D. Cooper, long since come to his long home with our teacher. A year or so later Millard Blanchard (who has just passed away at his home in Delphos, Kansas) taught us the rudiments.

A careful perusal of the locals in the "Statesman" reveals a few old, well-remembered names, notably: Hendricks, Backhaus, Ferber, Perschbacher, Schiefel, Wenzel, Romaine and Mathieu. Half a century has brought many changes in individuals and places, yet the old-time recollections are the ones that last longest. I have the writer: moved from Fond du Lac County with his parents in 1868, yet all these years he has to some extent kept in touch with events in his old neighborhood. My father, Harvey Parsons settled at what afterward became the Five Corners (New Fane) in 1839, and became post master in 1852, holding the office until his removal to Iowa in 1868, when he was succeeded by John S. Torrey, and when Torrey moved away a year later, John Stephan was appointed post master. I have the distinguished honor of having been born in the post office at New Fane—date deponent saith not. It might be of interest to say we have more than a hundred thousand former Wisconsin people here in this part of southern California. Fond du Lac county is well represented, and Washington county has a large number also. A few from Kewaskum, among them William Stark and family live at Anaheim, four miles from Orange, and Dr. Arthur Domann is a resident of Orange, and one of the skilled and noted physicians of southern California. On Saturday, February 11th, the Wisconsin people in and around Los Angeles for a distance of 50 miles or more will hold their semi-annual picnic in the famous Sycamore Grove, Los Angeles, where will gather thousands of happy people from all parts of the old "Badger" state. Under the wide spreading branches of the Sycamore and the Live Oak they will meet in a joyful reunion, and while enjoying the meeting with the friends here will live over the glories of the past in day-gone by among the hills and dales of old Wisconsin." Sincerely, W. W. Parsons.

The Federal Aid included in the above total is $8,000,000. In Washington County, project No. 304, on the Milwaukee-Fond du Lac road, about 8-1.3 miles of 18 foot concrete will be laid. GRAND FINALE FOR CONFERENCE

Ending of Arms Parley Staged in Continental Memorial Hall at Washington.

SPEECH BY THE PRESIDENT

Resume of Nations' Treaties That May Prevent Future Conflicts—Define Moves of Peace of World Are Epitomized.

Washington, Feb. 7.—The grand finale of the Washington conference on limitation of armaments and Pacific and Far Eastern questions was staged in Continental Memorial hall Monday.

The delegates attached their signatures to five treaties, listened to a message of benediction by President Harding and then went home to await the reaction that will show whether the people are as pleased as they are with their ministrations into an upset world.

The scene evened out during the ceremony of signing the pacts, while Mrs. Harding looked down upon the diplomats and distinguished dignitaries from a box. Flanking on all sides of the delegates seated about the square green-covered table were the members of the cabinet, justices of the Supreme court, attaches of the delegations and the full diplomatic corps resident in Washington, members of the senate and house and 200 newspaper correspondents from all lands and all climes.

The ceremony of signing alone required two hours and a quarter. The delegates were seated and had to rise and walk around the great table to the point where the treaties were spread out as their delegations were announced in turn.

The conference, just closed, resulted in these definite moves toward world peace:

A ten-year quadruple treaty between the United States, Great Britain, France and Japan, pledging the powers to respect each others' territory in the Pacific and calling for a conference of nations when the peace of the Pacific region is threatened, this compact to abrogate the long standing Anglo-Japanese alliance.

A five-power treaty by the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, limiting the size of their navies; scrapping all building programs and nearly $50,000 tons of battleships, the pact to run for 15 years.

A five-power treaty condemning and forbidding under international law the use of poison gas in warfare and making it illegal and an act of piracy for a submarine to attack or sink a merchant ship.

A three-power agreement by the United States, Great Britain, and Japan, providing for the maintenance of the status quo in Pacific fortifications and naval bases.

Settlement between Japan and China of the long standing and threatening Shantung controversy.

An agreement of the nine powers to adhere to and revitalize the "open door" policy incorporated into a treaty with China which makes many provisions for breaking the international shackles upon that republic.

A formal pledge by Japan to withdraw from Siberia and the northern portion of the Island of Sakhalin when a stable Russian government can deal with outcasts in Sakhalin, and providing guaranty of the territorial integrity of Russia and equality of opportunity with its borders.

Modification by Japan of the "twenty-one demands" upon China.

Treaty making alignment of former German cables in the Pacific.

Treaty of the nine powers with China establishing an effective 5 per cent tax and providing a commission to assess surtaxes for further increasing revenue of that republic.

The creation of an international commission to meet within three months to review and revise the laws of war to conform to new impetuities of warfare.

TROOPS CAPTURE STILLS IN TEXAS

Rangers, Militia and U. S. Agents Make Raids in Freestone County.

SIXTY-ONE PRISONERS HELD

Raiders Are Armed With Machine Guns and Are Directed by Airplane—River Bottoms Are Searched for Moonshiners.

Tenaga, Tex., Feb. 6.—Nine stills captured, 61 prisoners in custody, a large quantity of liquor ingredients confiscated—this was the toll of a series of systematic raids conducted by Texas Rangers, National Guardsmen and postilion enforcement officers in the 600 square miles of Freestone county's sparsely settled and densely wooded territory over which martial law was extended by gubernatorial proclamation.

Raiders are still in progress, with officers in charge announcing that they would be continued until the area was cleared of illicit liquor, and its manufacturers. The general belief is that the greater part of this task is accomplished.

Raiders so far have been without a casualty, although the raiding forces started the operation with expectations of meeting a determined resistance.

Not a shot was fired by the raiders, and what shooting was done by the moonshiners is believed to have been done for the purpose of covering signals. Heavy arms, including several machine guns, carried by the raiders caused the fugitives to make summary surrender when once they were espied by their pursuers. An airplane which directed the raiders to the moonshiners' lairs was fired on from ambush, but neither the plane nor the pilot was hit.

Just what disposition will be made of the prisoners was not known. Forty-eight men, including 17 negroes, are being held at Camp Winter garden, military headquarters, under heavy guard. Other prisoners are being held at the improvised military camp near Fairfield.

Meanwhile officers and troops continued along three lines, it was said—the trail of the skulking figure of a man seen around the director's apartments both before and after neighbors heard a shot in the night; the whereabouts of a former servant, arrested for the alleged robbery of the director and reported to have threatened revenge; and the sender of an anonymous letter in which were inclosed pawn tickets for articles stolen from Taylor.

Every person known to have been in or near the apartments where Taylor's body, with a bullet wound in the neck, was found yesterday morning has been closely questioned in the search for clues to the murderer.

These persons ranged from Henry Peavey, Taylor's negro houseman, to Mabel Normand, motion picture actress, while others prominent in the film industry whose names were brought into newspapers in connection with the director's death included Edna Purviance and Mary Miles Minter, also motion picture actresses.

Peavey gave the police an account of his finding the body and of his spreading the alarm. Miss Normand, who was one of the last to see the director alive, told of the call she made at his apartments the night before in connection with a book Taylor had loaned her.

Miss Purviance, who occupies an apartment near that of Taylor, telephoned the news of his death to Miss Normand shortly after Peavey had discovered the body, and Miss Minter was said to have burst into tears when she arrived at the Taylor apartment with her mother to learn if they could help in any way.

Taylor had directed many actors prominent in the film world, including Miss Minter and Mary Pickford. Pictures of the two and that of Miss Normand occupied prominent places in his apartments.

"ACTORS' SALARIES MUST BE REDUCED!"—FILM PRODUCER

SEEK TAYLOR SLAYER U. S. MARKET REPORT

Los Angeles Police Quiz Movie Stars in Murder Case.

Mabel Normand Last Person to See Director Alive—Servant Threatened Revenge.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 4.—Revenge, jealousy, hate and unanswered love all were considered by the police in continuing their search for the slayer of William Desmond Taylor, motion picture director, whose body was found in his apartment here.

While the meager clues obtained so far pointed chiefly to the commission of the crime by a man, the detectives actively engaged on the case said they still believed it possible that Taylor had been killed by a woman.

Their hunt was largely centered along three lines, it was said—the trail of the skulking figure of a man seen around the director's apartments both before and after neighbors heard a shot in the night; the whereabouts of a former servant, arrested for the alleged robbery of the director and reported to have threatened revenge; and the sender of an anonymous letter in which were inclosed pawn tickets for articles stolen from Taylor.

Every person known to have been in or near the apartments where Taylor's body, with a bullet wound in the neck, was found yesterday morning has been closely questioned in the search for clues to the murderer.

These persons ranged from Henry Peavey, Taylor's negro houseman, to Mabel Normand, motion picture actress, while others prominent in the film industry whose names were brought into newspapers in connection with the director's death included Edna Purviance and Mary Miles Minter, also motion picture actresses.

Peavey gave the police an account of his finding the body and of his spreading the alarm. Miss Normand, who was one of the last to see the director alive, told of the call she made at his apartments the night before in connection with a book Taylor had loaned her.

Miss Purviance, who occupies an apartment near that of Taylor, telephoned the news of his death to Miss Normand shortly after Peavey had discovered the body, and Miss Minter was said to have burst into tears when she arrived at the Taylor apartment with her mother to learn if they could help in any way.

WISCONSIN STATE NEWS

Madison—There can be no time out for lunch at Wisconsin elections without violating the statutes, despite the practice long in effect in cities of the state to close down polls for one hour at noon. This interpretation was given the election laws by E. E. Brossard, assistant attorney general, in a general opinion to Elmer S. Hall, secretary of state. He holds that electors may be registered in the state on election day, other than at general elections even for spring elections and during even numbered years. Registration, he says, may be held on any election or primary day with the elector permitted to vote on that same day, but no name can be added to the registry list on the day of a general election.

Madison—The state had a balance of $5,534,836 in its treasury funds on Feb. 1, Henry Johnson, state treasurer, reported to Gov. Blaine. More than $4,600,000 is in the general fund, which has been replenished during the last month with automobile license fees, inheritance taxes and highway money. Receipts in the general fund for the month from the sources mentioned totaled $3,862,769, while disbursements were $1,627,637. Total receipts in all funds amounted to $4,737,832, while total expenditures were $2,551,727. Payments of cash bonds to former soldiers reached a new low mark of $35,689 for the month.

Madison—Business in Wisconsin is looking up, the labor department states, in its monthly country wide survey of employment conditions. Almost everything except the metal trade is putting on an increased force. Machine industry has made small progress, but those firms manufacturing road making machinery are doing a fairly good business, some activity has begun in iron and steel castings. Clothing makers have resumed operations or spring orders. Production and sales of furniture has been satisfactory and prospects are good.

Madison—Elevator inspectors of the industrial commission found 1,372 violations of the state elevator code during the last quarter. In its quarterly report, the engineering department said that during the year 10,762 violations of the state code were discovered, while insurance companies reported 4,982 violators. The commission has checked several insurance companies, it said, and has placed them on probation for failure to report all violations of the code.

Racine—Jess Ingersoll, a detective of the Racine police department, was discharged from service by the police and fire commission when he was found guilty of sensational charges which had been preferred against him by Chief of Police Baker following investigations of complaints made against Ingersoll by girls. These complaints were made after arrests had been made. Ingersoll was suspended to await investigation and hearing by the commission.

Madison—The last fifty years have seen the dairy center of the nation move closer and closer to Wisconsin. During that period this state, in 1850 the twenty-seventh dairy state in the Union, has risen to the leading position, followed by New York and Minnesota, the college officials say. The dairy center, which in 1850 was 10 miles north of Crawa City, Ohio, by 1920 had moved to 40 miles south of Galesburg, Ill.

He got back into the motor car; the man who drove them quickly toward the valley taking easily and steadily to Peter, attempting to interest him in the affairs of some water company in San Francisco. When they got to the valley a city train was arriving, and Peter saw people looking at him furtively and sorrowfully. He remembered the man, many times; he had visited for the first time; he glanced toward the big madrone under which she always parked her car. She was usually deep in a book as he crossed from the train, but she would fling it into the back seat and make room for him beside her. The dog would bound into the tonneau, and Peter would hand her husband his mail, the car would start with a great plunge toward the mountain—toward the cool garden high up on the ridge—

Cherry looked small and pathetic in her fresh black, and her face was marked by secret incessant weeping. But the nurses and doctors could not say enough for her self-control; she was always composed, always quietly helpful and calm when they saw her, and she was always busy. From early morning when she slipped into the sick-room, to stand looking at the unconscious Martin with a troubled, intense expression that the nurses came to know well, until night, she moved unobtrusively about the quiet, shaded house. She supervised the Chinese boy, saw that the nurses had their hours for rest and exercise, telephoned, dusted and arranged the rooms, saw callers sweetly and patiently, filled vases with flowers.

Every day she had several vigils in the sick-room, and every day at least one long talk with the doctors. Every afternoon and evening had its calls; she and Peter were rarely alone. Martin was utterly unconscious of the life that flowed on about him; sometimes he seemed to recognize Cherry, and would stare with painful intensity into her face, but after a few seconds his gaze would wander to the strange nurses, and the room that he had never known, and with a puzzled sigh he would close his eyes again, and drift back into his own strange world of pain, fever and unconsciousness.

About every day there was the sudden summons and panic in the old house, Peter going toward the sick-room with a quick beating at his heart, Cherry entering, white-faced and with terrified eyes, doctors and nurses gathering noiselessly near for the last scene in the drama of Martin's suffering. But the release did not come.

There would be murmuring among the doctors and nurses; the pulse was gaining, not losing, the apparently fatal, final symptoms were proving neither fatal nor final. The tension would relax; a doctor would go, a nurse slip from the room; Cherry, looking anxiously from one face to another, would breathe more easily. It was inevitable, she knew that now—but it was not to be this minute; it was not to be this hour.

"My dear—my dear!" Peter said to her one day, when spent and shaken she came stumbling from Martin's bedside and stood dazedly looking from the window into the soaking October forest, like a person stunned from a blow. "My poor little Cherry! If I could spare you this!"

"Nobody can spare me now!" she whispered. And very simply and quietly she added: "If I have been a fool—if I have been a selfish, wicked girl all my life, I am punished!"

"Cherry!" he protested, heart sick to see her so.

"Was it wrong for us to love each other, Peter?" she asked in a low tone. "I suppose it was? I suppose it was? But I never seemed as if—" she shut her eyes and sighed—"as if this—this—would come of it?" she whispered.

"That!" he echoed, breathless.

"Oh, I think this is punishment," Cherry continued, in the same lifeless, weary tone.

There was a silence. The rain dripped and dripped from the red-woods, the room in which they stood was in twilight, even at noon. Peter could think of nothing to say.

About two weeks after the accident there was a change in the tone of the physicians who had been giving almost all their time to Martin's case. There was no visible change in Martin, but that fact in itself was so surprising that it was construed into a definite hope that he would live.

Not as he had lived, they warned his wife. It would be but a restricted life; tied to his couch, or permitted, at least, to move about within a small boundary on crutches.

"Martin!" his wife exclaimed pitifully when his wife first discussed. "He has always been so strong—so independent! If I could rather—he would infinitely prefer to be dead!" But her mind was busy grasping the possibilities, too. "I won't suffer too much?" she asked fearfully.

They listened to assure her that the chance of his being partial recovery was still slight, but that in case of his convalescence Martin need not necessarily suffer.

long hours that she spent sitting beside him and holding his big, weak, strangely white hand, he explained one day. "I knew she was killed," he said, out of a silence. "I thought we both were."

"How did she ever happen to do it?" Cherry said. "She was always so sure of herself—even when she drove fast!"

"I don't know," he answered. "It was all like a flash, of course! I never watched her drive—I had such confidence in her!"

His interest dropped; she saw that the tide of pain was slowly rising again, and glanced at the clock. It was two; he might not have relief until four. In his own eyes she saw reflected the apprehension of her own.

"You might ask Peter to play some of that—rather stuff he was playing yesterday?" he suggested. Cherry, only too happy to have him want anything, to have him helped by anything, flew to find Peter. Busy with one of the trays that were being brought to interest and please the invalid now, she told herself that the house was a different place, now that one nurse was gone, the doctors coming only for brief calls, and the dear, familiar sound of the old piano echoing through the rooms.

Martin came from the fiery furnace changed in soul and body. It was a thin, gentle, strangely patient man who was propped in bed for his Thanksgiving dinner, and whose pale face turned with an appreciative smile to the decorations and the gifts that made his room cheerful.

The heavy cloud lightened slowly but steadily; Martin had a long talk, dreaded by Cherry from the first hours of the accident, with his physicians. He bore the ultimatum with unexpected fortitude.

"Let me get this straight," he said slowly. "The arm is O. K. and the leg, but the back—"

Cherry, kneeling beside him, her hands on his, drew a winning breath. Martin reassured her with an indulgent nod.

"I've known it right along!" he told her. He looked at the doctors. "It's no go?"

"I don't see why I should deceive you, my dear boy," said the younger doctor, who had grown very fond of him. "You can still beat me at bridge."

About every day there was the sudden summons and panic in the old house, Peter going toward the sick-room with a quick beating at his heart, Cherry entering, white-faced and with terrified eyes, doctors and nurses gathering noiselessly near for the last scene in the drama of Martin's suffering. They listened to assure her that the chance of his being partial recovery was still slight, but that in case of his convalescence Martin need not necessarily suffer.

"He needs you now," Peter conceded, "and I don't ask you to do anything that must distress him now. But in a few months, when his mother comes down for a visit you must tell them honestly that you care for me," he said.

Cherry was trembling violently. "But how could I?" she protested. "Tell him that I am going away, deserting him when he most needs me!" Peter had grown very pale.

"But—" he stammered, his face close to hers—"but you cannot mean that this is the end?"

She moved her lips as if she was about to speak; looked at him blankly. Then suddenly tears came, and she wrenched her hands free from his, and laid her arms about his neck. Her wet cheek was pressed to his own, and he put his arms tightly about the little slumped figure.

"Peter!" she whispered, desolately. And after a time, when the violence of her sobbing lessened, and she was breathing more quietly, she said again: "Peter! We can never dream that dream again."

"We shall dream it again," he corrected her.

Cherry did not answer for a long while. Then she gently disengaged herself from his arms, and sat erect. Her tears were ended now, and her voice firmer and surer.

"No; never again!" she told him. "I've been thinking about it, all these days, and I've come to see what's right, as I never did before. I'll never know about us, Peter—and that's been the one thing for which I could be thankful in all this time! But I had only one hope for me, and that was that somehow Martin and I would come to be—well, to be nearer to each other, and that somehow he and I would make a success of our marriage, would spare—well, let's say the family name, from all the disgrace and publicity of a divorce."

"But, Cherry, my child—" Peter expostulated. "You cannot sacrifice all your life to the fancy that no one else can take your place with him!"

"That," she said, steadily, "is just what I must do!"

Peter looked at her for a few seconds without speaking.

"You don't love him," he said.

"No," she admitted, gravely. "I don't love him—not in the way you mean."

"He is nothing to you," Peter argued. "As a matter of fact, it never was what a marriage should be. It was always—a mistake."

"Yes," she conceded, sadly. "It was always a mistake!"

"Then there is nothing to bind you to him," Peter added.

"No—and there isn't! I'll distress now!" she agreed, thoughtfully. "And yet," she went on, suddenly, "I do this more for him than for any one!"

Peter looked at her in silence, looked back at the last flicker of the fire.

"You will change your mind after awhile!" he said.

Cherry rose from the chair, and stood with dropped head and troubled eyes, looking down at the flame.

"No, I shall never change my mind!" she said, in a low tone that was still strangely firm and final for her.

"For five or ten or twenty or thirty years I shall always be where Martin is, caring for him, amusing him, making a life for him," and Cherry raised her glorious blue eyes in which there was a pure and an uplifted look that Peter had never seen there before. "It is what Dad and I have always wished," she finished, solemnly, "and I do for them!"

Peter did not answer; and after a moment she went quietly and quickly from the room, with the new air of quiet responsibility that she had worn ever since the accident.

CHAPTER XX.

Peter saw, with a sort of stupefaction, that life was satisfying her now as life had never satisfied restlessness, exacting little Cherry before.

She spent much of her free time by her husband's side, amusing him as skillfully as a mother. He was getting so popular that she had to be ready for callers every day. Would he like her to keep George Sewall for dinner, when they could play dominoes again? Would he like the table with the picture puzzle? He would like just to talk? Very well; they would talk.

Martin's day was so filled and divided with small pleasures that it was apt to amuse him by passing too quickly. He had special breakfasts, he had his paper, his hair was brushed and his bed remade a dozen times a day. Cherry shared her mail, which was always heavy now, with him; she fitted into the sick-room every few minutes with small messages or gifts.

With her bare, bright head, her busy white hands, her voice all motherly amusement and sympathy and sweetness, she had never seemed so much a wife. She had the pleasantest laugh in the world, and she often laughed. The sick-room was kept with exquisite simplicity, with such freshness, brightness, and order as made it a place of delight. One day Cherry brought home a great Vlkovoy bowl of silvery glass, and a dozen dried goblets, and Martin never tired of watching them lily white he listened to her reading.

"Cherry," Peter said, on a wet January day, when he came upon her in the dining room, contentedly arranging a fragrant mass of wet violets. "I think Martin's out of the woods now, I believe I'll be moving along."

"Oh, but we want you always, Peter," she said, innocently reproful.

The ghost of a pained smile flitted across his face.

"Thank you," he said, gently. "But I think I will go," he added, mildly. She made no further protest.

"But where?" she asked, sympathetically.

"I don't know," he said, thoughtfully, giving him more of her attention than had been usual of late. "Here is something to think of, Peter. It's this: we have so much to be thankful for, because she never—she! It was madness," Cherry went on, eagerly. "Sheer madness—that is clear now. I don't try to explain it, because it's all been washed away by the frightful thing that happened. I'm different now; you're different—I don't know how we ever thought we could—"

It's this: we have so much to be thankful for, because she never—she! It was madness," Cherry went on, eagerly. "Sheer madness—that is clear now. I don't try to explain it, because it's all been washed away by the frightful thing that happened. I'm different now; you're different—I don't know how we ever thought we could—"

"I'm different now; you're different—I don't know how we ever thought we could—"

There was a silence during which she looked at him anxiously, but the expression on his face did not alter, and he did not speak.

"And what I think we ought to be thankful for," she resumed, "is that I have you, Peter—she would rather have it this way. She told me that she would be heart-broken if there had been any actual separation between me and Martin, and how much worse that would have been—what we planned, I mean. She was spared that, and we were spared—I see it now—what would have ruined both our lives. We were brought to our senses, and the awakening only came a little sooner than it would have come anyway!"

Peter had walked to the window, and was looking out at the shabby winter trees that were dripping rain, and at the beaten garden, where the drenched chrysanthemums had been broken to the soaked earth.

"Here, in Dad's home," Cherry said, coming to stand beside him, "I see how wicked and how mad I was. In another twenty-four hours it would have been too late—you don't know how often I wake up in the night and shiver, thinking that! And as it is, I am here in the dear old house, and Martin—well, you can see that even Martin's life is going to be far happier than it ever was! It's such a joy to me," she added, with the radiant look she often wore when her husband's comfort was under consideration, "to feel that we need never worry about the money end of things—there's enough for what we need forever!"

GROUSE LIVES LIKE ESKIMO

In Cold Weather the Bird Finds a Safe and Warm Retreat in Snow House.

In the temperate months the grouse has an excellent choice of food consisting of a great variety of berries, small fruit, seeds, buds, clover, heech-nuts, grasshoppers and a multitude of young, tender leaves. In the winter one wonders at their survival; for now the fall flight of the robins completely exhausts the berries, which were wont to linger and ripen well into winter, compelling the grouse to depend largely upon yellow birch buds, with many a forced meal on an evergreen.

Fortunately whenever the temperature is far below zero the sky is usually clear and the grouse are active and unconcerned, but if the days and nights are dark and cold or the air filled with merciless pellets, they have the habit of plunging into deep snow-drifts, where a foot below the surface the heat and weight of the body form a globular retreat, in which they remain comfortably until the storm clears or hunger forces an exit.

Sometimes in winter or the early spring there may come a rain or a warm day that melts the surface snow followed by severe weather, and then thousands of grouse are imprisoned and the heretofore safe retreat becomes their tomb, should weeks pass by before the seal is broken.—National Geographic Magazine.

Many Years Ago.

White-haired Uncle Peleg Perkins, known as the oldest person in his community, was standing by his gate when a touring car stopped close behind him. Several of the ladies in it asked numerous patronizing questions concerning the locality. Then one of them remarked:

"You must have been around here quite a long time."

Uncle Peleg slowly raised his stick and pointed toward a not distant mountain.

"Yes, ma'am," he said gravely. "I have so. You see that there big, high mountain over across? Well, the time I first come here that there mountain wasn't but just about the biggest of an ant hill."—Harper's Magazine.

The "Sage of Monticello."

The "Sage of Monticello" was a se bright bestow upon Thomas Jefferson, in allusion to the wisdom displayed by him in political affairs during his residence at Monticello, Va after his retirement from the presidency.

Truth and Inquiry.

Truth never lost ground by inquiry; because she is, most of all, reasonable.—William Penn.

THIN FRAIL PEOPLE SHOULD TAKE TANLAC

Hundreds of Men and Women All Over America Appear To Be Physical Wrecks Simply Because Their Systems Are Starving for Nourishment.

There are hundreds of thin, run-down, nervous men and women all over the United States who should be strong, sturdy and vigorous, with rich, red blood tingling through their veins and feeling brimful of life and energy, if they would only profit by the experience of others all over the United States and Canada, and assist nature to digest the food they eat, by simply taking Tanlac.

Millions of people have not only been relieved of the most obstinate forms of dyspepsia and indigestion by Tanlac after other remedies have failed, but large numbers of them have reported a remarkable and rapid increase in weight and a return to normal health and strength by its use. In fact, no phenomenal have been the gains in weight by thin, frail people through the use of Tanlac that this remarkable preparation is now being proclaimed everywhere as the World's Greatest Tonic.

The food people eat does them absolutely no good unless they digest it properly. When you suffer from indigestion and other forms of stomach trouble, the food does you harm instead of good, because food which is not digested stays in the stomach and ferments, causing pain, swelling, gas on stomach, shortness of breath, bad taste in the mouth, dizziness and many other disagreeable symptoms. If this condition is permitted to run on for an indefinite period the entire system becomes saturated with poisons, the patient becomes thin and pale and in time various complications are apt to result.

Tanlac is a powerful reconstructive tonic and quickly overcomes this condition by adding nature to eliminate the impurities from the system in a natural way and enable the vital organs to properly perform their functions. That is why it is called Nature's Medicine.

In fact, there is not a single portion of the body that is not benefited by the helpful action of Tanlac, which begins its work by stimulating the digestive and assimilative organs, thereby enriching the blood and invigorating the entire system. Next, it enables the weak, worn-out stomach to thoroughly digest its food and convert the nourishing elements into bone, blood and muscle. The result is you taste in the mouth, dizziness and many other disagreeable symptoms. If this condition is permitted to run on for an indefinite period the entire

CARDINALS MAKE RATTI NEW POPE

Elect the Archbishop of Milan to Succeed Benedict XV.

HE WILL REIGN AS PIUS XI

Proclaimed at Once by the Sacred College as Supreme Pontiff, He Blesses the Multitude and Retires to the Vatican.

Rome, Feb. 6.—The Roman Catholic church has a new supreme pontiff. Today the sacred college elected Cardinal Achille Ratti, archbishop of Milan, to succeed Benedict XV and he ascended the papal throne as Pius XI.

The thousands waiting in front of St. Peter's for the sight of smoke which would tell of the election of a new pope or the failure of the sacred college to reach a decision gave a mighty shout at 11:35, when a wisp of thin smoke instead of the heavy black smoke that indicated an undecided ballot came from the chimney leading from the Sistine chapel. It was then known that the Catholic church had once more a duly elected pontiff.

"Will of God: I Must Obey." As soon as the two-thirds vote for Cardinal Ratti had been verified, Cardinal Vanutelli, as dean of the sacred college, arose and proceeded to the throne of the chosen one, accompanied on either side by Cardinals Luconi and Bissolati, respectively deans of the cardinal priests and the cardinal deacons. He was asked in Latin by Cardinal Vanutelli, in accordance with custom, if he accepted the election to be supreme pontiff, and the new pope answered with the formal "Since it is the will of God, I must obey."

Then the purple canopies over the thrones of the cardinals were let down, one by one, until only that over the new pontiff remained. This was done to show that the whole sacred college rendered obedience to the new head of the church. Dean Vanutelli thereupon asked the new incumbent what name he chose to take during his pontificate, and upon his replying "Pius XI," Mr. Sincero, secretary of the conclave, verified his election to the papal chair.

The new pope was then escorted to the anteroom within the Sistine chapel, where he discarded his cardinal's robes, assisted by the conclavists, and the papal vestments, which had been held in readiness since the opening of the conclave, were placed upon him. These included the white cassock, white sash, white stockings, red slip-pers, a red and gold mozzetta, and finally the stole of red worked with gold.

Cardinals Pay Him Homage. The pontiff, fully vested with the papal garb and accompanied by his cardinals, thereupon returned to the throne he had occupied in the Sistine chapel. There the cardinals, according to their rank, and headed by Vanutelli, made their first act of homage to the holiness, kissing first his feet and then his hands, after which the pope received them in embrace and bestowed upon them his first apostolic benediction.

The "fisherman's ring" was placed on his finger, and he left the chapel, the whole assembly wending its way through the Sala Ducale and the Sala Regia, along the loggia to the Sala Clementina, the pope's official residence. All along the way he received the homage of the attaches who served during the conclave. It was decreed that a pope must never pass his confines.

This decree was a result of the first definition of the legal status of the Vatican. The exact determination of the legal position is furnished by the law of guarantees of May 13, 1871. The Piedmontese entered Rome through the breach in the Porta Pia on September 20, 1870, and seized at once all the possessions of the Papal states. Therefore, the independence of these states came to an end.

The new masters of Rome soon came to see how great a commotion their actions had brought about among the Catholics of the world and among the powers. After negotiations began at once it was decided that a law would be drafted insuring the Pope the position of head of the Catholic church. The law was based on international law rather than Italian, and consequently there could be no alteration of it by the Italian government.

And if she didn't know it must be some new stunt, so when the dressing was completed and the turkey wrapped the B. G. put her question. "Why did you pull out the cords from the legs?" she asked. The butcher smiled. "That makes them easier to chew," he said. The B. G.'s curiosity was appeased.—Chicago Journal.

PINKY PIG'S IDEA

"I have an idea," grunted Pinky Pig. "Of what use is that?" asked Grandfather Porky. "No one can eat it."

"No one can," grunted Miss Ham. "No one," said Mrs. Pinky Pig. "Not even a pig could, and a pig isn't fussy," said Sammy Sausage. "Sammy is right," said Brother Bacon.

"But maybe he has an idea of how to find food or something like that," suggested Miss Ham. "We had better let him speak."

"Let him speak," the others said, "as there might be something to what Miss Ham says."

"You all talk," said Pinky Pig, "as though you could stop me from speaking if you wanted to. You could all grunt and squeal so loudly that I couldn't be heard but at the same time that mightn't stop me from speaking."

"I might become discouraged, but I don't believe I'd be as discouraged as all that for I've often had nice talks with myself when all of you have been grunting and squealing."

"What in the world have you said to yourself?" they asked him. "Oh, I've said, 'Well, Pinky, if you're smart and watch closely out of your right eye you may get more food than anyone else.'"

"And I've said: 'Now Pinky, grab from your brothers and sisters and your parents and your grandparents. Don't disgrace the family name of pig.'"

"And I've said to myself, 'Pinky, a young pig never forget that you are a pig! Be a regular pig. Don't be unselfish or generous, don't be anything foolish like that. Be a regular pig.'"

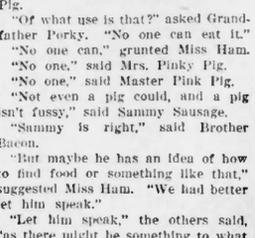

"And I've said to myself, 'there now, if you're quick, you can grab that away from your brother. Hurry now, Pinky.'"

"Such have been the things I've said to myself," said the others. "Well, well, that's different," Grandfather Porky said. "We had an idea, I think, at least I know I had, that you had said quite different things to yourself."

"Yes, we all thought so," said the other pigs. "What did you think I had said to myself?" asked Pinky. "Well, I was afraid," said Grandfather Porky, "that perhaps you had

Use hot water to kill germs. Harmful molds or fungi should be destroyed before seeds are planted. Most soils are unsuited.

To be sure of obtaining healthy young plants for transplanting to the home garden or elsewhere, treat the soil in the seed box with boiling water a few days before planting. Most all soils commonly used for seed beds contain one or more kinds of harmful molds or fungi and in addition, in the South, a destructive earthworm which causes a disease of many garden crops commonly called rootknot.

Recently it has been learned by the United States Department of Agriculture that seedbed soil can be made reasonably free from these plant enemies by this simple hot-water treatment. If disease spores are not eliminated, plants will become diseased and die or remain stunted.

Before treating the soil it should be placed in the box ready for seeding. Make a few holes in the bottom of the box for drainage. Pour on the boiling water very slowly at the rate of two gallons to a box of soil one foot square and four inches deep and at once cover with a newspaper to help hold the heat for a longer time. After a few days or whenever the soil has dried out enough the seed may be planted.

Young plants grown in this treated soil not only have white, sound roots, but also have a healthy, vigorous appearance above ground. Besides this, seeds sprout better and the plants grow much faster than those planted in untreated soil.

Ordinarily diseased seedlings are a fine salad plant, being more tender when cut up than ordinary cabbage. The plant demands very rich, well-drained soil, but must not be allowed to suffer from lack of moisture. Seed should be started in a seedbed and the plants transplanted when they are quite small. They should be set not closer than two feet apart each way and will repay careful and continuous cultivation.—United States Department of Agriculture.

HOW TO GROW DAHLIAS The dahlia has many double and some single forms of reds and yellows. They are usually grown from rootstocks, but they can be grown from seed readily by those who have had a little experience with plants. The double-flowered varieties must be sown as early as April for satisfactory bloom the first year, while the single varieties may be sown as late as July. Dahlias must be grown where frost cannot reach them, so in the North it is necessary to start the double-flowered ones under glass.

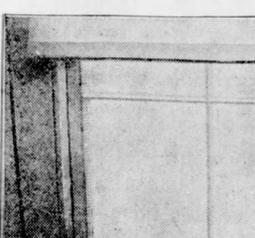

Chinese cabbage is said by botanists to be closely related to the turnip. It makes a head of erect leaves, which is stemless and rests on the ground. It is often listed by seedsmen as Pa'head or Peking, which is a form of its Chinese name (Pai-sai). This plant may be used as a potherb, like kale or spinach, or when headed makes a

BROWN SUGAR DISHES

The flavor of brown sugar is so generally liked that we may now use it more plentifully. In the good old childhood days there was ever anything that tasted better than bread and butter sprinkled with a little brown sugar? Let the children have it, as it is much more wholesome than most candies. It's molasses flavor makes it especially attractive for candies.

Brown Sugar Parfait.—Take one-half cupful each of brown sugar and water and cook without stirring, shaking the pan often to prevent burning. When a drop from the spoon makes a thread remove from the heat and pour over the whites of two eggs which have been beaten stiff. Beat until cold, then add one cupful of cream whipped stiff, flavor and pack in a mold; pack in ice and salt for three or four hours.

Brown Sugar Pudding.—Beat two egg yolks with one scant cupful of dark brown sugar, two tablespoonfuls of flour and one tablespoonful of creamed butter. Mix smooth, then add one cupful of rich milk gradually until smooth. Cool slightly and add the beaten whites of the eggs. Mix lightly and serve garnished with bits of grape jelly.

Brown Sugar Tapioca.—Soak four tablespoonfuls of tapioca in one quart of cold milk, add a pinch of salt, but the size of an egg, half a cupful of brown sugar and a half cupful of raisins. Bake two hours.

Brown Sugar Frosting.—Beat the white of an egg until stiff, add two tablespoonfuls of cold water, three cupfuls of brown sugar and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Beat thoroughly, then add the flavoring.

Brown-Sugar Sauce.—Boil one cupful of brown sugar, add one-half cupful of hot water, one tablespoonful of flour, and when well cooked add one-half cupful of butter. Roll up and serve hot on cottage pudding.

Just as in nature, thy proportions be, As full of concord their variety.

SOMETHING TO EAT

A nice cake to serve the same day it is baked is

Chocolate Sponge.—Beat the yolks of three eggs until thick and lemon colored, then add one cupful of sugar, a very little at a time. Melt one and one-half squares of chocolate in one-fourth of a cupful of milk, over hot water; cool and add to the sugar and eggs. Beat the whites of the eggs until stiff and dry and add to the first mixture, alternating with one and one-fourth cupfuls of flour, sifted five times with one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder; add five drops of vanilla extract and bake in an ungreased tin. When done serve broken in pieces and sprinkle with powdered sugar.

Lemon Sticks.—Cream one-third of a cupful of butter, add one cupful of sugar gradually, and beat until light. Beat the yolks of eight eggs until thick, add to the sugar and butter with the grated rind of a large lemon. Sift two cupfuls of flour three times, then sift again with three teaspoonfuls of flour, sugar and eggs, alternating with one-half cupful of sweet milk. Bake in bread-stick tins and roll in powdered sugar while still hot. They may be baked in a dripping pan and cut in strips.

Lightning Cake.—Cream one-half cupful of butter, add one-half cupful of sugar a little at a time, then the beaten yolks of three eggs. Sift one cupful of flour, adding a teaspoonful of baking powder; add this to the first mixture, alternating with three tablespoonfuls of milk, then add one-half cupful of orange rind. Spread in a shallow well-buttered tin and spread with the beaten whites of the egg, six tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and one-half cupful of blanched and shredded almonds. Bake carefully, not to overbrown the top. Cut in squares and serve.

Peach Rosettes.—Cut stale sponge cake in rounds three inches in diameter, cook in butter until delicately browned, on each place one-half of a drained canned peach; with a pastry bag or a paper cone, top each with a rose of sweetened and flavored whipped cream. Sprinkle with chopped pistachio nuts.

Stuffing for Fish.—Take one-fourth of a loaf of bread, add one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, one teaspoonful of onion juice, one teaspoonful of sweet basil, one fourth of a teaspoonful of salt, the same of pepper, and one-fourth of a cupful of melted butter.

The Use of Glass.—Glass is not altogether a modern requisite. It was used by the Romans in the time of Tiberius, and the ruins of Pompeii show windows of glass used before the year 79. In medieval times wonderful effects were created with glass.

Try to Say Something Good.—Have a good word for everybody. The only man who has a right to look down on others, is the man in an alms-house. Even the tombstones speak well of those beneath them.—J. H. Turner.

NOT A MATTER FOR POLICE

Elderly Gentleman Meant Well, but He Had Not Allowed for Possible Contingencies.

The wisest person may sometimes make a serious mistake by judging entirely by appearance, as is shown by this case.

A careless young woman, in starting to leave a car, dropped her purse. A young man, who evidently intended to leave the car at the same time, saw her drop the purse, picked it up and put it into his pocket.

But his action had not been unnoticed. Just as he stepped from the car an elderly man gripped him by the arm and whispered: "If you don't give that purse to the young lady this instant I'll expose you."

"Yes, certainly," gasped the astonished young man. Then, with a grin, "I beg pardon, Marie; you dropped your purse."

"Oh, thank you, Harry," she replied, as she took it.

"I hope you are satisfied," said Harry, turning to the elderly man. "The lady is my sister."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

CHINESE WOMEN ADVANCE

About the only thing of modern times to which China has not laid claim as being so old in that country that it was outworn and discarded centuries ago, is the new woman with a magazine of her very own, published in the interest of her development.

This publication, called the New Woman, boldly states as its object the reform of the old society to give more honorable place to women and the new woman is described as "a joyous being, of honest occupation, complete personality, free, independent and mutually helpful," says the Pittsburgh Dispatch.

NEW YEAR LEVEE

President Washington's Reception at the White House.

Friendly Greetings of Citizens. It is Recorded, Greatly Pleased the First Chief Executive.

"In the Republican Court," a volume published in 1854 by D. Appleton & Company dealing with the administration of Washington, appears the following interesting description of New Year's activities of 1790, and particularly the manner of observing New Year's at the White House, where Martha Washington, the ever-considerate spouse, dismissed her guests at 9 o'clock in order that her "general" slumber might not be interfered with:

The winter of 1789-90 was warmer than any which the oldest inhabitants could remember. In the last week of December and the first of January gardeners and farmers on the island of Manhattan were plowing, and women appeared in the streets of the city in their summer dresses. The pleasant custom of making New Year's calls had long obtained in most of the countries of continental Europe, and it was brought to New York by both the Dutch and the Huguenots, who had preserved it as one of their peculiar institutions, which never could be naturalized in towns of a more purely English origin and population.

On Friday, the first of January, 1790, we are informed by the late viceroy John Pinard, who was then a young man of fashion, and a close observer, the President was waited upon by the principal gentlemen of the metropolis.

Washington's Stately Bearing. It is not known, though Mr. Pinard assures us that a majority of them were personally unacquainted with him, that there were any to complain of such a stately bearing as about this time returned a sagacious colonel from Virginia for the safety of the republic. This colonel had traveled, and after attending one of the receptions of the President he declared, at the table of Gov. Beverly Randolph, in Richmond, that "his bows were more distant and stiff" than any he had seen at St. James's. A correspondent informed

Martha Washington as She Appeared in 1790. (From an Old Engraving.)

Mrs. Washington's Levee. Mrs. Washington held her levee, as on other Friday evenings, but on no previous occasion had one been graced with so much respectability and elegance. The air was almost as gentle as it should be in May, and the full moon shone so brightly that the streets to a late hour were filled with the delicious twilight. It was not the custom for visitors of the President to sit, but it appears from Mr. Pinard's diary that, on this night, at least, there were chairs in the rooms where Mrs. Washington sat her guests, for "after they were seated," tea and coffee, and plain and plain cake, were dispensed by the attending servants. She remarked, while speaking of the day's occurrences, that none of them had so pleased the general (by which title she always designated her husband) as the friendly greetings of the gentlemen who called upon him at noon.

Mrs. Washington had stood by his side as the visitors arrived and were presented, and when the clock in the hall was heard striking 9, she advanced, and with a complacent smile said, "The general always retires at 9, and I usually precede him," upon which all arose, made their parting salutations, and withdrew.

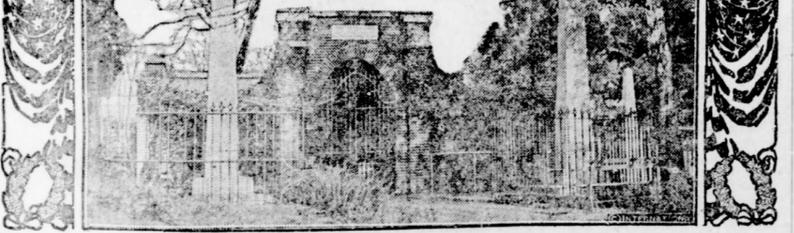

Washington of the fearful apprehensions thus awakened, and he replied, "That I have not been able to make bows to the taste of poor Colonel Blank, who, by the way, I believe never saw but one of them, is to be regretted; especially as, upon that occasion, they were indiscriminately bestowed and the best I was master of. Would it not have been better to throw the veil of charity over them, ascribing their stiffness to the effects of age, or to the unskillfulness of my teacher, rather than to pride and dignity of office?"

TOMB OF WASHINGTON, AMERICA'S NATIONAL SHRINE

SEAT OF WASHINGTON FAMILY

That Sulgrave Manor Was Home of Ancestors of Immortal American Items Established.

The precise connection between George Washington and Sulgrave manor has been the subject of controversy, writes the Manchester Guardian. Soon after the election of the first American President, Sir Isaac Heard, then garter king of arms, drew up a pedigree which showed that his great-grandfather, John Washington, and his great-granduncle, Lawrence Washington, emigrated to Virginia about 1637. These two emigrants figured on the pedigree as the great-grandsons of the Lawrence Washington whom Henry VIII granted Sulgrave manor, and who, on building the present manor-house, placed over the main doorway the coat-of-arms said by some to have been the origin of the American Stars and Stripes.

The accuracy of this pedigree was contested toward the middle of the nineteenth century by an American genealogist, Colonel Chester, who declared that the two alleged emigrants never left England. John, he maintained, became Sir John Washington, of Thrapston, and Lawrence, the Rev. Lawrence Washington, rector of Purleigh, Essex.

In 1881 another American genealogist, Henry P. Waters, embarked on another expedition of George Washington's pedigree. After labors extending over six years he published conclusive proof that Lawrence Washington, rector of Purleigh, was the father of two boys, John and Lawrence, who emigrated to Virginia, John being the great-grandfather of General Washington.

According to Sir Isaac Heard, the Purleigh rector was the emigrant, but as a matter of fact a whole generation had been omitted from Heard's pedigree. When Waters rectified this and inserted the two missing names the connection between John and George Washington was firmly re-established.

WASHINGTON

How loftily in this one life were seen Simplicity, self-denial, truth austere, While, like the enwreathing vine about the oak,

In delicate breeding and suave ease of mien,

In all fine courteous affability, spoke The gallantry of an old world cavalier, What stoic patience nerved his lightest breath

In that long arduous fight's ordeal severe, And on the indomitable bread and height Of his supernal virtue, towering white,

How sightless calumny dashed itself to death, True gentleman, blameless ruler, matchless man, Our model and type, our first American— Nay, all of lordlier meaning than no words have won Till baffled eulogy pauses and says simply—Washington. —Edgar Fawcett.

Why does any healthy person want to be kicked into wakefulness in the morning?

Many people feel that they have to be agitated into wakefulness in the morning. They think that without the tea or coffee they take in the morning that they will not be able to meet the tasks and duties of the day.

Nothing could be more false than this reasoning. Any doctor can tell you this. For a healthy body does not require a stimulant. It gets all the stimulant it needs from food.

The thein and caffeine found in tea and coffee are irritating to the heart and nervous system. They jolt the nerves into undue activity. The result is a reaction. This is why regular tea and coffee drinkers think they must have their stimulant the first thing in the morning to wind them up for the day.

If you will stop using tea and coffee for a week, and drink

Postum, the pure cereal beverage instead, it will give Nature an opportunity to rid the system of the irritating substances that harass your nerves, upset digestion, increase your heart action, and make you nervous and irritable.

Many people who have tried Postum say that inside of a week they wake in the morning without that "all gone" feeling that they used to have, and are full of energy, strength and endurance.

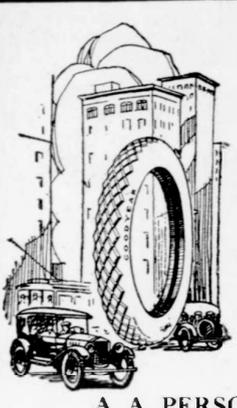

Order Postum from your grocer today, and make it according to directions. Your first sip of Postum will surprise and please you.

Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) made instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages of larger bulk, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling for 20 minutes.
