MANY LOVED ONES PASS-INTO ETERNAL SLEEP DURING THE PAST WEEK

DEATH OF MRS. PAULINA FECHTNER

In the midst of active life, Mrs. Paulina Fechtner, a highly respected and well known former citizen of Kewaskum, suddenly and unexpectedly fell asleep in death, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Herman Meilahn, at 820 North Graham street, Milwaukee, last week Friday afternoon, Sept. 12, 1924. Cause of death being apoplexy. Mrs. Fechtner was born on March 20, 1860, in Wayne, Washington County, Wis., where she spent her childhood days. In 1886 she was married to Charles Fechtner. In the year 1893, the couple moved to the village of Kewaskum, where her husband preceded her in death in 1908. Mrs. Fechtner then made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Herman Meilahn. In 1921, when Mr. and Mrs. Meilahn moved to Milwaukee, she left with them, at which place she resided until her death. Deceased was the mother of three children. Those surviving are, Augusta (Mrs. Herman Meilahn) of Milwaukee and Louis Fechtner of Chicago. One child died in infancy. Deceased also leaves to mourn, one sister, Mrs. Edward Glitz of Milwaukee; one brother, Paul of Wayne, South Dakota; six grand children and a host of friends. Mrs. Fechtner was a lady possessed with those qualities of womanhood that made for her a good wife, mother and neighbor. Always thinking of others, never for herself. Even to the very day before her passing, she was receiving neighborly calls with all the courtesy and kindness that characterized her personality. She was a true Christian lady, and at all times had the welfare of the church of which she was an active member, at heart. Her sudden demise came as a great shock to her many friends here, who join in extending heartfelt sympathy to the surviving relatives. The funeral was held on Tuesday at 11 o'clock from the home of her daughter, with services in the Ev. Luth. St. Lucas church, Kewaskum, at 2 p. m. Rev. H. Heidel officiated. Interment was made in the congregation's cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We, the undersigned, desire to express our sincere thanks to all our relatives and friends, for the kind sympathy extended to us in our recent bereavement, the death and burial of our beloved mother, Mrs. Charles Fechtner, to the pall bearers, Rev. H. Heidel for his consoling words, and to all, who loaned cars and attended the funeral.

The Surviving Children.

DEATH OF AUGUST BILGO SR.

At five o'clock Friday morning, Sept. 19, 1924, death summoned to his final reward, August Bilgo, Sr., at his home in this village, after an illness of several months with cancer of the throat. Deceased was born Oct. 24, 1859, in the town of Auburn, where he resided on a farm until March 13, 1902, when he moved with his family to this village, where he has since resided. On Oct. 18, 1887, he was married to Barbara Guth. Four children were born of this union, of whom three together with their grief-stricken mother survive, and who are: Mrs. Minna Mertens at home; Frieda (Mrs. William Schaub Jr.) and August Bilgo Jr., of Kewaskum. One child died several years ago. Besides these he leaves one sister, Mrs. Emilie Krueger of Dundee and three grand children, Beulah Schaub, Mona Mertens and Roger Bilgo of this village. Deceased was one of Kewaskum's most highly respected and well known citizens. He was a man of a jovial disposition, and always friendly toward whom he ever chanced to meet. Though he was in ill health since last spring, he was always able to be up and around. No matter how severe his suffering was at times, he bore them patiently and courageously, up to the time of his death. The day prior to his passing, he was up and around conversing with his friends in the village, and the news of his sudden, yet expected death, came as a shock to his large circle of friends who join in extending heartfelt sympathy to the surviving relatives. The funeral will be held at 1:45 p. m., Monday, Sept. 22, from the family residence, and at 2 p. m. at the Ev. Luth. St. Lucas church. Rev. H. Heidel will officiate. Interment will be made in the congregation's cemetery.

DEATH OF MRS. WILLIAM MARQUARDT

In the prime of life, death called away a young mother, at her home near St. Michaels, on Wednesday afternoon, at 1:30 o'clock, Sept. 17, 1924. Mrs. William Marquardt, (nee Lillian Stern), who after an illness of two weeks passed away at the age of 30 years, 5 months and 10 days. Deceased was born April 7, 1894, in the town of Kewaskum. On Jan. 6, 1918, she was married to Wm. Marquardt. The couple resided in this village for a few years, moving onto a farm near St. Michaels last April, where they have since resided. Besides her sorrowing husband, she leaves to mourn her untimely death, one son Leroy, aged 4 years; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Siera of the town of Kewaskum; six sisters, and three brothers, as follows: Emma (Mrs. Chas. Meinecke Jr.), Ida (Mrs. Otto Neinecke), Edna (Mrs. Melvin Wendelborn), Herman and Fred Stern of Kewaskum, Henry Siera of Fredonia; Annie (Mrs. Louis Ramthun), Katie (Mrs. Henry Ramthun), Frieda (Mrs. Willie Kutz) of Dundee. The death of Mrs. Marquardt has brought to a close a life that was well lived. A young wife and mother, faithful and true to the end. Her untimely death, which occurred in the midst of her life's joys is indeed a great shock to her grief-stricken husband and community in which she lived. Her early demise will be keenly felt and greatly mourned by all who knew her. The funeral will be held today (Saturday) at 2 p. m., from the residence with services in the Ev. Peace church. Rev. H. L. Barth will officiate. Burial will be made in the congregation's cemetery.

DEATH OF MRS. WM. TORKE

Mrs. William Torke, prominent citizen of the town of Sherman, Sheboygan county, died at her home on Saturday, Sept. 13, 1924 at the age of 81 years, 11 months and 3 days. Deceased had been ill for two weeks, brought on by the infirmities of old age. She was born Oct. 10, 1843, in Germany. In 1852 she immigrated to America, and settled in the town of Sherman, where she has since lived. In 1859, she was married to Wm. Torke. Deceased was the mother of nine children, as follows: August of Cascade; Hermann, Martin and Otto of Minnesota; Henry of Milwaukee; Philip at home; Mrs. Tillie Macneil; Mrs. Anna Pfeiffer and Louise of Milwaukee. The funeral was held Wednesday, Sept. 17, with services in the Luth. church at Cascade. Rev. Halboth officiated. Interment was made in the congregation's cemetery.

DEATH OF PETER KOHN

At 9 a. m., Tuesday, Sept. 9, 1924, Peter Kohn, a former well known citizen of the town of Wayne, was called away from the family circle. Deceased had been ill since last Friday when he suffered a stroke of apoplexy. He was born July 5, 1855, in the town of Auburn. In 1880 he was married to Annie Doyle. Shortly after their marriage they moved onto a farm in the town of Wayne. Three children were born of this union. Those surviving are Jerry of South Milwaukee and Peter of South Dakota. Frank died in Feb., 1923. In 1902 his wife died. In 1903 he was married to Mrs. William Helm. One child, Lenora of Iowa survives him from his second marriage. One son Willie was killed in the Colorado mines several years ago. Besides these he leaves his wife, 1 brother, Christ of Wausau; 1 step brother, Christ of Green Bay; one sister, Mrs. Annie Metz of Kewaskum and 4 step sisters, Mrs. Lutz Lynch, Mrs. Louise Tillman of Marshville; Mrs. Lizzie Becking and Mrs. Kate Becking of Chicago, to mourn his demise. After his second marriage he moved to North Fond du Lac, and later to Fond du Lac, where he lived to the time of his death, and where he was in the employ of the C. & N. W. Ry. The funeral was held Friday at 10 a. m., with services in the St. Bridget's church. Rev. Vogt of Kewaskum officiated. Burial was made in the adjoining cemetery.

PLAY 17 INNING GAME

In one of the most exciting baseball games played at Campbellsport this year, took place when the team of that place played a 15 inning tie game with Batavia there Sunday afternoon. The score was 1 to 1, and had to be called on account of darkness. Witt, pitcher for Campbellsport and Hildebrand, star twirler for Batavia, were in fine form and were given splendid support. There promises to be another great game played at Campbellsport next Sunday when Eden and Campbellsport play for the Semi-pro championship of Fond du Lac county. Each team having won two games and this game no doubt will be a hummer, the largest crowd of the season is expected to be present. Eden will have the crack Fond du Lac League battery Jones and Klevenow. Armstrong and Horey will perform for Campbellsport. Spatz Miller and Eldon Ramthun from here play on the Campbellsport team and have played great ball all season. Jack Kullman of West Bend will umpire, and no doubt will handle the game without arguments. Mr. Kullman umpired the game last Sunday.

INSURANCE COMPANY HAS 29th ANNIVERSARY

The Campbellsport Mutual Fire Insurance Company was organized July 30th, 1895, and commenced issuing policies on September 18th, 1895, on which date $105,500.00 insurance took effect. On September 18th, 1924 the company completed 29 years of a successful business record.

Since organization the company has written over 70,000 policies aggregating a $75,300,000.00 insurance, and gross premiums have amounted to over $650,000.00, and, as the company charges only 75% of the board rate, the members or policy holders have been saved in premiums about $400,000.00.

The company has paid 1925 losses, amounting to nearly $228,000.00, but has gross assets of about $78,000.00. It has a reserve of about $36,000.00, and surplus of about $30,000.00, and total admitted net assets of about $70,000.00.

The interest and discount earnings have amounted to over $50,000.00, and the company has a commodious, fire proof office building, erected in 1913, valued at $7500.00.

Over 2800 policies have been issued the present year, amounting to about $3,200,000.00, and there are at present about 7000 policies in force, aggregating about $8,250,000.00 on the company's books.

Less than $175.00 has been charged off the books, as had accounts in 29 years, of a total of over $650,000.00 of gross premiums.

The present officers and directors are: O. G. Hendricks, President; L. C. Kohler, Vice-President; H. A. Wruke, Secretary; William Wedde, Treasurer; E. F. Martin, Math. Schaefer, R. Rosenbaum, Alfred Van de Zande and George C. Wachs, of whom the first five named, have been connected with the company since organization. H. A. Wruke has been secretary and manager since the company was organized.

The company has been in business 29 years, and is one of the leading mutuals of Wisconsin, writing business in the entire state at 75% of the tariff rates, thus saving the assured 25 percent when writing the insurance.

The company has established an enviable record for efficient service and prompt payment of losses.

BABY DROWNS IN WASH-TUB

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Kutz of Round Lake, was thrown into deep sorrow on Tuesday evening, when their sixteen months old daughter, Dorothy, came to her death by drowning in a wash-tub at the family residence. Mrs. Kutz had been washing clothes in the house for a short time to hang out the clothes. When she returned, she was shocked to find her baby daughter in the tub, head down and with her feet on the rim of the tub. She called a neighbor, Carl Voight, who tried first aid methods of resuscitating the child. In the meantime a doctor was called, who tried various means of resuscitation, but the child was dead when he reached the home. Dorothy was the only child in the family. The funeral was held Friday at 10 a. m., with services in the Luth. church at Dundee. Rev. Aepler officiated. Burial was made in the congregation's cemetery.

SILVER LOVING CUP ARRIVES

The silver loving cup, which was won by the Kewaskum Post No. 384 of the American Legion, last August for the largest increase in membership on a per cent basis in the 2nd Dist., arrived here on Tuesday morning. The trophy surely is a beauty. On one side it has the following engraved upon it: "Second Dist. Membership Cup, The American Legion, Dept. of Wisconsin. Awarded for Increase in Membership." And on the opposite side: "Awarded to Kewaskum Post No. 384, Kewaskum, Wis., for Largest Increase in Dist. on Aug. 14, 1924. 115% over 1923". The cup is now on display at Bank of Kewaskum, where all can have an opportunity to see it.

The cup will be on exhibition in the show window of Clem Reinders' furniture store next week.

OPENING DANCE TONIGHT

The opening dance of the season will be held at the Kewaskum Opera House, tonight, Saturday. A special feature of the dance is that a double orchestra has been engaged to furnish the music. Si Mahlberg's artists and Merrell Owen's Pennsylvanians, will furnish continuous music throughout the evening. John Kohn, manager, has done everything possible to make this dance an enjoyable affair for one and all, and invites the general public to attend.

MEETS WITH PAINFUL INJURIES

Wm. Enright, a prominent farmer of the town of Farmington, met with a painful accident on Tuesday afternoon, which resulted in the fracture of three ribs. Mr. Enright was assisting his neighbor John Kloehn in threshing. Mr. Enright was climbing up an extension ladder to get to the top of the straw sack, when suddenly the top part of the ladder gave way and he fell twenty feet down through a window of the barn finally landing on the barn floor. Medical aid was immediately summoned and the unfortunate man was taken to a hospital at West Bend, where he is getting along as well as can be expected at this writing.

SEE KEWASKUM FLOOD PICTURES IN CALIFORNIA

Mrs. Charles Koch, son Oscar and Edgar Schaefer of Beechwood and Mrs. John Koenig of Milwaukee, who returned home this week from a two day auto trip to the western coast, and other points of interest in the western states, had a great and rather unusual surprise sprung upon them while visiting in San Francisco, Calif. It was here while attending one of the moving picture theatres, they saw the pictures of the flood here last August flashed on the movie screen. Some of the pictures shown were: the washout of the concrete bridge, near the John P. Fellenz farm on Highway 55; the two railroad bridges, the train wreck; the high tide of water caused by the minor creek just south of the village limits; the flood on the Albert Koehler farm, south of here, caused by the over flow of the Milwaukee river; the flood in the marsh, between Kewaskum and West Bend, where the water flowed over Highway 55, at a depth of about 18 inches; the flood at Barton and West Bend, and north of Kewaskum to Fond du Lac. The pictures, no doubt, were flashed on the movie screen in all the larger cities of the United States.

FREE ACTS AT THE COUNTY FAIR RICH BILL OF AMUSEMENTS BOOKED

A bill of amusements, which is calculated to come up to the best ever secured for any Washington County Fair, has been booked for this year's event, October 7, 8, 9 and 10. A County Fair without the amusement element would be a drab affair. People do not go there just to learn but also to laugh. This is an experience an old as the institution, and every year since it was held on the grounds the engagement of free attractions has received the most careful attention of the officers of our Agricultural society.

This year the management was fortunate to sign a contract with Lew Rosenthal's Amusement Enterprises of Dubuque, Iowa, a nationally reputed firm, for some of the best acts ever seen on an open air stage. These consist of two acts by Harry Bauer & Company, a man, a lady, and a little girl. Harry Bauer performs fifty feet in the air on a swing flying trapeze and finishes his act with upside down loop walking. Bauer is considered the greatest high-in-the-air man living. The second act is a Roman ring act by the same trio in beautiful wardrobe. The girl, little Loretta, is the talk of all fairs wherever they see. She is only a little tot, but she does a routine of tricks on the rings, that are truly wonderful.

Two other acts will be performed by a Japanese troupe known as the Yokohama Boys. They consist of two men and one lady. The first act presents comedy double barrel kicking, double water or fire juggling and screen kicking. In the second act the lady balances a pole on top of which is a platform, on which her male partner is foot juggling. A barrel is passed from the top of the platform to the top of the pole a distance of at least 25 feet.

The fair management incurs a big expense in bringing these acts to the grounds, but they are worth it, and to see them is considered worth the admission to the grounds alone. They are furnished under guarantee to satisfy.

In addition to these excellent and unusual acts, the pure white Lone Pacer, "Limited," and a Trick Pony will entertain the crowds. As annual acts of this kind are always welcome, these will surely add to the delight and wonderment of the beholders.

The seventh free act consists of a daily performance by the famous "Rube" Gus Henderson, a comedy bounding rope artist. He will keep the spectators holding their breath or laughing while he goes through his marvelous antics on the tight rope, somersaulting backwards, jumping and dancing and having numerous funny falls and situations. It is the best comedy feature obtainable for any outdoor affair.

As usual, the sports will be represented by the noblest of all sports, the "sport of kings," the horse races. These will furnish the exciting element at the County Fair, and they promise to be as good as any in the last few years, since our turf events, coming at the end of the season, assumed such magnitude and importance. Horse races will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, while Friday has been set aside for auto races.

A novelty in the sport line, new on the grounds at least, that nevertheless is hoary old and would seem in line with the foot races and plowing matches of the first Fairs held here some sixty odd years ago, will be pulled off this year—a contest in "harnyard golf" vulgo horseshoe throwing. There will be a contest every afternoon with finals Friday afternoon. The entry fee is 25 cents, and the entries close Oct. 7, the entry day. Three prizes will be awarded, consisting in $8.00, $5.00 and $2.00 worth of merchandise given by Piek Bros. company. Considering the wider favor this old game has of late gained, having been added to the more exclusive sports, there should be quite a number of contestants and interesting games.

The contests are open to all. Robert Rolfs will be the referee. Another novelty, and free to view at that, will be a Red Cross pageant, showing the activities of the Junior Red Cross in the county. There will be band concerts every afternoon, which should also be classed among the free attractions. Good bands will be engaged, to listen to the music of which always is an enjoyment.

Summing it up, it must be stated that the pure amusement and enjoyment features of the coming Washington County Fair are so well taken care of that there is no excuse for staying away on that score. But the County Fair offers a great deal more enjoyment to those who not only wish to laugh but also to learn, in its shows of pure bred farm animals, agricultural and horticultural shows, domestic art and school exhibits, machinery, and last but not least, in its social features, in mixing with more than half the population of the county and gloriing in our progress and achievements during the past year.

STATESMAN RECEIVES ANOTHER COMPLIMENT

The publishers of the Statesman received another compliment last week. The Post Washington Star of last week's issue, lauds the publishers of the Statesman on the manner the paper is published, for which we wish to express our sincere thanks to Editor Bolens. The article reads as follows: "The Kewaskum Statesman celebrated its twenty-ninth anniversary on August 30. To the publishers of the Statesman we extend hearty felicitations. The citizens of Kewaskum possess in their community newspaper a community asset of great present and potential power and prestige and we are glad to see that they appreciate this fact—an appreciation evidenced by generous advertising patronage."

HAS HAND CUT IN CIRCLE SAW

While at work at his home at Long Lake, A. L. Newton, suffered a painful injury to his right hand on Monday morning, while at work sawing lumber. In some unknown manner, Mr. Newton's hand slipped onto the saw, cutting off the little finger, part of the next one and badly cutting the rest of the hand. He was taken to Campbellsport immediately after the accident where he received medical attention. The unfortunate man is between sixty-five and seventy years old.

APPLY FOR PARDON

Application has been made to Gov. J. J. Blaine for a pardon or a commutation of sentence of Wm. Martin of West Bend, who was sentenced to serve eight years in the state prison at Waupun for the crime of assault with intent to commit rape. The application will be heard at the executive chamber at Madison on Oct. 1, at 10 a. m., or as soon thereafter as it can be heard.—West Bend Pilot.

Judith of Blue Lake Ranch

By JACKSON GREGORY

Copyright by Charles Scribner's Sons

THE HOLDUP

SYNOPSIS—Bud Lee, horse foreman of the Blue Lake ranch, convinced Bayne Trevors, manager, to deliberately wreck the property owned by Judith Langworthy, a young woman, her cousin, Pollock Hampton, and Timothy Gray, decides to throw up his job. Judith arrives and announces she has bought Gray's share in the ranch and will run it. She discharges Trevors, after shooting him twice in self-defense. The men on the ranch, including taking orders from a girl, but by substituting a vicious horse and giving her thorough knowledge of ranch life, Judith wins the best of them over. Lee decides to stay for a while at least. Judith becomes convinced that her veterinarian, Bill Crowley, is treacherous. She discharges him and gets back Doc Tripp, her dead father's man. Pollock Hampton, part owner, comes to stay for good.

Accompanying young Hampton was "Major" Langworthy, a little, short, fat, bald gentleman, who, so far as the knowledge of his club members went, had never been connected with any part of the army or navy, unless one counted his congenial friends of cocktail drinkers; Mrs. Langworthy, his supercilious, uninteresting wife; Marcia, his languidly graceful daughter, in whom Hampton gave certain signs of being considerably interested; Marshall Rogers, the Oakland lawyer and Frank Farris, the artist. Also Marcia's maid, and Hampton's Japanese valet, Fujio. In due course of time this representative of the flowery kingdom grew to be great friends with Jose, the two foxhunts suspected by Mrs. Simpson of all sorts of dark plots and of a racial sympathy which must be watched lest it produce "something terrible."

Pollock Hampton, holding a third of the shares of the big venture, with his legitimate claim upon a third of the income, was of course a factor which must be taken into account. Judith asked frankly how long he planned to stay.

"I'm here for good," he answered cheerfully. His explanation followed with a grin, quite as though he were telling her of some rare good news: "Money's all gone, creditors are nuisances, there's no prospect with you here of leaving you send me anything. What is left for me but to stay?"

Judith suggested a monthly allowance. Hampton laughed good-humoredly.

"I'm here to keep me out of the way? There's nothing stirring, Judith. Absolutely. I'm here to give a hand."

Judith had hopes, even yet, that a couple of weeks or a month at the most of life as it runs forty miles from a railroad would dampen and finally extinguish his bright enthusiasm. But swiftly these hopes died. This was his first visit to the mountains, and for a man sick of the city's social round, every inch of the ranch, river and cliffs and rolling hills had its compelling interest. Perhaps the thing which Judith overlooked was the blood of his fathers. For before Pollock Hampton, Sr. had made his money he and his wife had been, like Luke Sanford, pioneers. Now something in the mountains here called vaguely to the soul of young Hampton and made him restless and stirred his heart. As he stood looking on while Bud Lee rode a bucking bronco, his eyes were bright and eager.

It soon became obvious that long ago Hampton had given freely of his admiration to Bayne Trevors.

"A great man!" cried Hampton warmly. "The only man I know big enough to swing a job like this."

To himself he said that the chief good he could do at the outset was to work to get Trevors back. With this in his mind and having had no full account of Judith's manner of ejecting the general manager, he went straight to her.

"Trevors is a friend of mine," he said lightly. "I'm going to ask him over to meet my guests. No objection is there?"

She looked at him keenly.

"Do as you please," was the cool answer. "I imagine he won't care to come."

Launched upon his first business venture, Hampton went to the telephone. That evening at the table he surprised Judith not a little when he said casually that Trevors had said he'd run over in a day or so, as soon as he could find time.

Mrs. Langworthy had no liking to bestow upon such as Judith. The girl, she confided every night to the major, was unadmirable, unwomanly, outre, horsey, unthinkably, an insult to any woman into whose presence she came. The major agreed monosyllabically or with silent nods for the sake of peace. Personally he was rather inclined to fancy Judith's uncoerced figure, to admire her red-blooded beauty, and he always touched up the ends of his mustaches in her presence.

Judith, having early taken Mrs. Langworthy's measure, found an Irish joy in regarding the proprieties for her especial benefit. She said "I'm" upon occasions when Mrs. Langworthy was there to hear at table she talked of prize hounds and sick calves, and other kindred vulgar matters.

sufficient type, were little behind the major in interest.

During the last week of May, a rumor came to Judith's ears of which, at first, she thought little. Carson, coming to her upon a bit of ranch business, remarked dryly before taking his departure, that a report had got around among his men—Poker Face had mentioned it to him—that Blue Lake ranch was on its last legs; that it was even to be doubted, if the men ever saw another pay day before the whole affair went into a receiver's hands. Judith laughed at him and told him not to worry.

"Me?" said Carson. "I'm not the worrying kind. But does like that ain't good to have floating around. A man won't do more'n half work when he's wondering all the time if he's going to get his mazzama for it."

But, when again the rumor came, this time telephoned up to her from the Lower End by Doc Tripp, she frowned and wondered. And she was careful, upon the thirtieth of May, to send Charlie Miller, the storekeeper, into Rocky Bend for the monthly pay roll money. Charlie left for Rocky Bend in the afternoon, spending the night in town to get the customary morning start for the ranch. The men were to be paid at six o'clock.

Upon this same day Pollock Hampton told Judith that Bayne Trevors was coming to the ranch to have dinner, spending the night and the following day. Judith made no reply beyond favoring him with a quick look of question. She had not believed that the man would come. What next?

The last day of May came, and true to his promise, Trevors was a guest at the house from which, so short a time ago, he had been evicted. He dined there that night, cool and self-confident, casually polite to Judith, civil and courteous to the other guests, especially to Major and Mrs. Langworthy and Marcia, leading conversations unobtrusively, making himself liked.

The morning after Trevors' arrival, Judith was up betimes and breakfasted alone. Lurching early, noon found her in the office expecting Charlie Miller. She was at work on the pay roll book when her telephone rang. It was Doc Tripp and there was suppressed excitement in his voice.

"Bad news, Judy," he began. "I sure looks as though you were getting your share."

"What is it, Doc?" she broke in sharply. "Tell me."

"It's Charlie Miller. Hurt. No, not bad. Thrown off his horse, back in Squaw Creek canyon. And—robbed."

Quickly he told all that had happened. Miller, hastening back with the wage money, was riding through the narrow gorge when a man sprang out suddenly in front of him. Miller's horse, shying, swerving unexpectedly, had thrown him. Before he could get to his feet the bag of gold under his coat had been torn off, his revolver wrenched away and the Light-woman, his face masked with a red bandana handkerchief, had run into the thick timber.

"Charlie just walked in, feeling like a drunken man," Tripp concluded. "I am supposing a posse of men from this end to try and get the stick-up man. You'd better do the same up there."

For a moment Judith sat staring at the telephone dully. Robbed of a thousand dollars, and in broad daylight.

"Judith was to send another fresh horse for him so that he could not fail to be back at the ranch-house by six o'clock, as Bud Lee, riding hard but never without thought for the horse which carried him, began the return trip, he drew the heavy-caliber revolver from his shirt and thrust it into his belt.

The road wound in and out among the pines, always climbing. Lee raced on, his eyes bright and keen, watchful and suspicious of every still shadow or stirring branch. From the top of the mountain, before he again followed a winding road back to the river's side, he saw a horseman riding a distant ridge, the sun glinting upon the rider's ribs.

"Old Carson himself," thought Lee. "Looking for the hold-up man, Shucks! They'll never find him this trip."

Another mile, and Bud Lee was riding through a clearing, with the tall cliffs of Squaw Creek canyon looming high on his left, when suddenly and absolutely without warning, his horse screamed, gathered itself for a wild plunge, staggered, stood a moment trembling terribly, then with a low moan collapsed under him.

light. A thing like this had not occurred on the Blue Lake for a dozen years.

"Bayne Trevors!" she gasped. For, suddenly, she thought that she understood the significance of the rumor which had twice in a week come to her. Trevors himself was on the ranch right now. . . . Her two fists clinched. Yes, Trevors was here with triple purpose: To carry favor with Hampton against a possible need of it, to establish an alibi for himself, to witness Judith's discomfiture, when at six o'clock she must turn the men away with an excuse.

CHAPTER V

Rifle Shots From the Cliffs

Thank heaven it was just noon! Judith sprung to her feet, her eyes bright and hard, and ran down to the men's quarters. Coming up from the corral were Carson and Bud Lee. "Miller with the pay roll money has been held up and robbed at Squaw creek," she told them swiftly. "Get some men together, Carson, and try to head the robber off."

"That's on the level, Miss Judith!" demanded Carson slowly.

"Of course it's on the level!" she cried impatiently. "Oh, I know what you're thinking. I'm going to phone immediately to the bank at Rocky Bend and have another man sent out upon getting your pay at six o'clock!"

"I told you, didn't I?" muttered Carson. "That I wasn't worrying none (person)? But if I was you'd sure have the money on tap!"

With that he left her, going hastily to round up what men he could find and get them into their saddles. Bud Lee, his eyes still on her, stood where he was.

"Well," demanded the girl, "aren't you going, too?" Suddenly angered by his leisurely air, she added cuttingly: "Not afraid, are you?"

"I was thinking," Lee answered coolly, "that the stick-up gang will most probably figure on a play like that. If he was real wise he'd mosey along toward Rocky Bend and pop off your second man. Two thousand bucks a day would make a real nice little draw."

Judith paused, frowning. There was truth in that. If Trevors really were behind this, he would have planned ahead.

"If you'd do my way," continued Lee thoughtfully, "I'll have just enough time to roll a smoke and saddle the little old Climax. He's in the stable now. You're not afraid of my double-crossing you? Even if a smart-headed man had planned the hold-up he wouldn't figure on a play like this. He'd think we'd have a Rocky Bend rider hit it out or else wait until tomorrow."

"It won't do," she decided quickly. "I want that money here at six o'clock."

"Eighty miles," mused the horse foreman. "Six hours. That's riding right along, but do it my way and I'll gamble you my own string of horses—and they're worth considerable more than a thousand—that'll be back, holed, at six."

Judith, quick at decisions, looked him hard in the eye, heard his plan, and three minutes later Bud Lee, a revolver in his shirt, rode away from the ranch-house, headed toward Rocky Bend. Judith already had called up Tripp, and the veterinarian himself, leading the fastest saddle-horse he could get his hands on at brief notice, was also riding toward Rocky Bend, from the Lower End, five miles in advance of Lee at the start. He went at a gentle trot, consulting his watch now and then.

So Bud Lee, riding as one of those hard, dare-devil riders who carry right across the land the mail-bag of the Pony express, overtook Doc Tripp, and changed to a fresh horse at the end of the first fifteen miles. The clock at the bank at Rocky Bend marked forty-three minutes after two as Lee, leaving a sweating horse at the door on Main street, presented his check at the paying teller's window. The money, in a small canvas bag, was ready.

"Hello, Bud!" and "Hello, Dan!" was the beginning and end of the conversation which ensued. Lee did not stop to count the money. He drew his belt up a hole as he went back to the door, found a fresh horse there fighting his bit and all but hitting the stable-boy off his feet, mounted and sped back along Main street.

Judith was to send another fresh horse for him so that he could not fail to be back at the ranch-house by six o'clock, as Bud Lee, riding hard but never without thought for the horse which carried him, began the return trip, he drew the heavy-caliber revolver from his shirt and thrust it into his belt.

The road wound in and out among the pines, always climbing. Lee raced on, his eyes bright and keen, watchful and suspicious of every still shadow or stirring branch. From the top of the mountain, before he again followed a winding road back to the river's side, he saw a horseman riding a distant ridge, the sun glinting upon the rider's ribs.

"Old Carson himself," thought Lee. "Looking for the hold-up man, Shucks! They'll never find him this trip."

Another mile, and Bud Lee was riding through a clearing, with the tall cliffs of Squaw Creek canyon looming high on his left, when suddenly and absolutely without warning, his horse screamed, gathered itself for a wild plunge, staggered, stood a moment trembling terribly, then with a low moan collapsed under him.

Lee swung out and to one side, landing clear as the big brute fell. He did not understand. He had ridden the animal hard but certainly not hard enough for this. And then he saw and his eyes blazed with anger. He had heard no shot, nothing beyond the metallic pounding of the shod hoofs on flinty road, but there from an ugly hole in the neck the saddle-horse was pouring out its blood.

"Snookless powder and a Maxim silencer," muttered Lee, his eyes taking note of the ten thousand possible holes in the cliffs.

In his ears there was a little whine as a second bullet sang its way by his head. Again he sought to locate the marksman, again saw nothing but Craig and precipice and brushy clump. He took time for that thing which came so hard to him, sent a bullet from his own revolver into his horse's brain, and then slipped out of the clearing into the shelter of the pines.

Still from the saddle, he moved on slowly for a little. But as his muscles responded and warmed to the effort, he broke into a trotting run.

For the second time that day he heard the whine of a bullet. He thought that the shot came from the cliffs just at the head of Squaw Creek canyon. But he could not be sure. He'd make the climb tomorrow and see about it. Now he'd keep right on moving. Little used to traveling save on a horse's back he was shot through with odd pains when at last he came to the border-line fence and the walking horse Tommy Burkitt held it for him while Lee mounted.

"Somebody up on the cliffs, head of the canyon," pointed Lee at Tommy's amazed expression when Lee came running into sight. "Killed my horse. Go after him, Tommy. Tell the other boys." And on he went, pounding at the last fifteen miles, the canvas bag beating against his side.

Judith, in the courtyard, watched him ride in. She looked swiftly at him from the watch on her wrist. Her eyes brightened. It lacked seven minutes to six. As Bud dropped the canvas bag into her hands she radiated at him the most wonderful, radiant smile that the long horseman had ever seen. She gripped his hand, broken hand in hers.

"Bud, you're a brat!" she cried.

Mrs. Langworthy had just come out with Hampton, Trevors and the major. Judith turned from Lee to Trevors, but managed to keep half an eye on Mrs. Langworthy.

"You see, it's pay day with us, Mr. Trevors," she said quietly. "And when pay day comes we pay our men at six o'clock in spite of h-l and high water."

Bud Lee, leading his horse away, turned for a word. "A man killed a horse for me today," he said very gently, and his eyes rested steadily upon Trevors. "If I ever get him, the man who put him up to it, I'm going to get him right."

On the Blue Lake ranch there was more than one man ready to scoff at the idea of a robbery like this one, frank enough to voice the suspicion: "It's just a stall for time!" So much had last week's rumor done for them, preparing them to expect something that would set aside the customary monthly pay day, that when they heard his story; when they had sat on their horses and looked down at the animal which had been shot under Bud Lee, they were silent. And, besides, when long after dark they came in behind Carson from a fruitless quest, their pay was ready for them as formerly, in gold and silver.

Trevors, with little to say to any one, took his departure in the forenoon, extracting from Hampton the promise to ride over and see the timber camp some day soon.

Judith, held at the office by a lot of first-of-the-month details, did not get away until close to eleven o'clock that morning. Then she rode swiftly down the river, a purpose of her own in mind.

Just below the Lower End settlement she came upon Doc Tripp. "Stick him a dozen more are off their feed and don't look right. A man's always afraid of the cholera. And," stub-

"Found it dead?" asked Judith.

"Killed it?" granted Tripp. "Stick him a dozen more are off their feed and don't look right. A man's always afraid of the cholera. And," stubbornly, "I won't believe it! There's been no chance of infection; why, there's not an infected horse this side of Rocky Bend, a clean hundred miles from here."

"Not getting nerves? Are you, Doc? And Judith spurred on down the valley.

Before she came to the spot where Bud Lee's horse had been shot she came upon Lee himself. A rifle across his arm, he was looking up at the cliffs of Squaw Creek canyon.

"Well, Lee," she said, "what do you make of it?"

He showed no surprise at seeing her and answered slowly, that far away look in his eyes as though he were alone still and speaking simply to Bud Lee.

"Using snookless powder nowadays is a handy thing for a man shooting under cover," he said. "Then rig up your gun with a silencer and get off at fair range, half a mile and up, with a telescope sight, and it's real nice fun picking folks off."

"All of that spells preparation," suggested Judith.

He nodded. When he offered no further remark but sat staring up at the cliffs, Judith asked:

"What else have you learned by coming back down here? Anything?"

"There were two men, anyway. I'd guess, three. The one who stuck up Charlie and then drifted while the drifting was good. Then the two other jaspers that tried to wing me."

"How do you know that?"

"My horse that was shot," he explained, "got it in the hole in the little fir tree yonder."

Judith saw what he meant now. At this point Lee yesterday had heard the second, bullet striking dangerously near. It had struck the fir, and plainly had been fired from some point off to the right of the canyon.

Briefly he went on to give her the rest of the results of his two-hour seeking for something definite. If she'd ride on a little she'd come to the spot where his horse had been killed; she would see in the road the sign where at Tripp's orders, the carcass had been dragged away. From there, looking off to the left, up the cliffs, she would see the spot which Lee believed had harbored one of the ruffians.

"Sudden Head," broke in Judith, gazing upward. "Bud Lee, I bet he's a horse you're right. . . ."

"And," said Lee, swinging from the saddle, "I'm going up there to have a little look around."

In an instant the girl was at his side.

"I'm going with you," she said simply.

He looked at her curiously. Then he shrugged his shoulders. An angry flush came to the girl's cheeks, but she went on with him. Not a word passed between them during the entire hour required to climb the steep side of the mountain and come under Indian Head cliffs. Here they stood together upon a narrow ledge of granite, resting. Again Judith saw Lee glance at her curiously. He had not sought to accommodate his swift climbing to a girl's gait and yet he had not dismounted. He was in the best of his health, his sleeves rolled up, a puzzled look of worry puckering his boyish face.

"What's up, Doc?" asked Judith.

"Don't know, Judy. That's what gets my mad up. Just performed an autopsy on one of your Poland-China gilts."

"Found it dead?" asked Judith.

"Killed it?" granted Tripp. "Stick him a dozen more are off their feed and don't look right. A man's always afraid of the cholera. And," stub-

SUBSTANTIAL FOODS

A salad may be something more than a bit of green and dressing, though that is often all that is required. A hearty salad is quite enough for a main dish. Chopped hard-cooked eggs, served with celery, or a little potato, green pepper, or chopped cooked beets, with a good boiled dressing, makes a good meal.

Chopped cooked beets, a bit of scraped onion and a cupful or more of sliced tender celery mixed with a mayonnaise which has been tinted pink, served on blanched lettuce, sprinkled with chopped or shredded almonds, makes a most satisfying salad.

Jellied Shrimp Salad.—Cook one quart of tomatoes with one cupful of water, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper, four cloves, one bay leaf, one tablespoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of mustard, and one small minced onion, fifteen minutes. Strain and pour the mixture over two tablespoonfuls of gelatin which has been softened in one-fourth of a cupful of cold water. Cool until it begins to stiffen and add one and one-half cupfuls of shrimps which have been well cleaned and cut into halves, then add one-half cupful of diced celery and one-fourth of a cupful of diced green pepper which has been parboiled and the skin removed. Pour into individual molds and chill until hardened. When ready to serve, turn out on beds of lettuce and garnish with boiled dressing or mayonnaise, as preferred.

Salmon and Pea Salad.—Take a can of salmon, removing all skin and bones, add an equal amount of cooked peas, season well and serve with a highly seasoned boiled dressing to which a chopped scallion pickle has been added. Serve on head lettuce with plenty of good dressing for a garnish.

Here is a main dish which is supposed to be entirely satisfying to any appetite: Take equal parts of chopped green peas and sweet corn pressed from the kernels, chopped raisins and dates mixed with honey and olive oil, pressed into cups to mold. Serve with a sauce prepared with sweet cream, honey, maple syrup and nut meal made from ground Brazil nuts.

Fruit and Nut Salad.—Remove skins and seeds from one-half pound of Malaga grapes. Add an equal amount of walnut meats broken into pieces. Marinate with French dressing and arrange in nests of lettuce. Garnish with candied cherries cut into halves.

But words are things and a small drop of ink, falling like dew upon a thought, produces that which makes thousands, perhaps millions think.

WAYS WITH FOOD

A potato salad may be varied with different vegetables and seasoning so that one may serve it often and always have a new one.

Potato Salad.—Cut up cold, boiled potatoes into small cubes, the smaller the better if not allowed to become unseasoned, as bits of potato are not easily penetrated with dressing if too large. Mix with a pint of potato water, one small, finely chopped or diced onion, add three tablespoonfuls of olive or vegetable oil and one tablespoonful of vinegar; mix well, adding a half-teaspoonful of salt and a few dashes of cayenne. A half cupful of cooked corn left from dinner may be added, or the same amount of peas, or coarsely chopped peanuts, or a little peanut butter may be added to the boiled or mayonnaise dressing which is added just before serving.

Cabbage and Carrot Salad.—Take a small, hard head of cabbage, cut into half and put it through the meat grinder—using the coarse knife—with three or four small, well scraped carrots. Serve on lettuce and garnish with small, yellow tomatoes, cut into quarters.

Prune and Lettuce Salad.—Soak a pound of prunes in cold water over night, after washing well. In the morning stammer until the prunes are tender, adding a little lemon juice. Stew and arrange as whole as possible on heart leaves of lettuce. Serve with a spoonful of French dressing and a spoonful of mayonnaise at the side of the salad. A bit of peanut butter or a few minced peanuts may be used for stuffing the prunes if desired, as the two flavors are especially palatable.

Apricot Honey.—Crush without putting very ripe apricots, cook with just enough water to keep them from sticking, until reduced to a pulp. Rub the fruit through a fine sieve and to each pint allow three-fourths of a pound of sugar; cook the pulp five minutes, then add the sugar, which should be heated hot; cook until thick, stirring often. Pour into sterilized glasses.

Hot apple sauce with gingerbread is good with a cup of tea or cocoa.

McCormick-Deering Corn Binders Will Speed Up Your Corn Harvest

Cuts from five to seven acres of corn a day. Does the work of five to seven men with corn knives. Makes the hard job of cutting corn easy. Easy to pull because of roller bearings. Picks up down and leaning corn. Adjustable for down and leaning corn. Makes easily handled bundles. Indispensable when filling silo. Can be equipped to load bundles on to a wagon. Equally useful in cutting dry corn.

Work of Five to Seven Men Done by One

To have silage in the best condition, it must be cut up and put into the silo shortly after the corn is cut in the field. To do this economically, a corn binder becomes indispensable. It would require a force of five to seven men to cut as much corn by hand as a binder will cut in a day and machine cut corn is bound in bundles ready to be loaded and fed to the ensilage cutter easily. Loose cornstalks are hard to load. About the only way they can be handled is in armfuls and you cannot throw an armful of loose cornstalks on a high load. This means that small loads must be hauled. Unbound stalks are hard to feed to the ensilage cutters because they lie in a more or less twisted and tangled mass on the load. The most economical way to handle corn for silage is to use a corn binder equipped with a bundle loader. A wagon can be driven alongside this outfit and the bundles carried up onto it as fast as they are bound. This means quick loading, getting the corn to the cutter promptly and a saving of one or two men ordinarily required to load the bundles on the wagons. Hired help usually dislike cutting corn by hand. The stalks are wet and tough early in the morning and are disagreeable to handle. The constant bending and stooping becomes mighty tiresome before night and the average man will cut and bind only about an acre a day. The same thing holds true when corn is to be cut into stover or shocked for husking by hand. It is much easier to handle bound bundles, much faster progress can be made with a binder and at a considerable saving of time and labor.

Any friends of the congregation from Kewaskum or vicinity desiring to attend these services may do so and rest assured of a cordial greeting by "The People's Church With the Friendly Welcome." Notice of time and themes of services appear elsewhere in this paper each week.

UNLAWFUL CREDIT CASES

The Bureau of Inquiry of the Commission has been advised of pleas of guilty by the New York Central, Erie and Lehigh Valley to indictments in the Federal Court for the Western District of New York at Buffalo charging unlawful extensions of credit to shippers in Buffalo and imposition of a fine of $5,000 on each of the carriers. The indictments were procured as the result of investigations by the Bureau of Inquiry.

This again emphasizes the importance of strict compliance with collection rules originally issued to all agents June 29, 1920.

Under those rules agents are directed to discontinue credit with any patron who will not pay charges within the required time, and they must be held responsible accordingly.

Anthony P. Schaefer, local station agent, urges that all who receive freight from the local station pay the charges promptly in order to comply with the above ruling.

IS APPOINTED CONSULTING ENGINEER

Nicholas Rimmel, vice-president and general manager of the Rimmel Manufacturing company, was appointed a consulting engineer last week by the different concrete mixer manufacturers of the state. This appointment was made at a meeting held by the manufacturers in the Cream City. He was one of three appointed. This is quite an honor for Mr. Rimmel, one which he well deserves. He is a genius at his trade and well posted in the building of concrete mixers. We wish to congratulate Mr. Rimmel upon the honor bestowed upon him.

Combines Ease of Operation with Good Work

It's genuine satisfaction to drive the John Deere Corn Binder round after round, and see the standing corn transformed into well-shaped, easily-handled bundles, because the hard work is all taken out.

The power carrier does away entirely with the hard work—you don't have to dump the bundle carrier and return to position hundreds of times during the day.

On the John Deere you press the foot trip lever and the power carrier does the rest—it delivers the bundles free of the path of the horses, and practically parallel to the standing corn. The horses don't have to tramp over and on the bundles. Because the carrier is always in receiving position, no bundles are scattered between the windrows.

You will also appreciate the John Deere Corn Binder because it is easy on the horses. The Quick-Turn Tongue Truck takes off all neck weight, and makes it just as easy to turn at the ends as if the horses were hitched to a wagon.

Besides, the truck takes off side draft and prevents shuing because the axle of the truck is flexibly mounted—the wheels hold to uneven ground constantly.

The John Deere works successfully in all kinds of corn fields. The wide throat, with flexible throat springs, holds the corn into the conveyor chains. The bottom conveyor chains operate close to the butts, carrying the corn back in a vertical position all of the way.

The three packers, one working above the needle and two below, insure well-formed bundles. The three discharge arms discharge the bundles onto the power carrier. No chance of the discharging bundle mixing with the bundle being made.

We want you to see this Binder. There are a lot of other good things about it we want to show you

DUCK SEASON OPENED SEPT. 16

The season for wild duck hunting opened on Tuesday, Sept. 16, and will close on December 20. A large number of hunters from here and other cities took advantage of the opening day, and were on the job bright and early to hunt the feathered tribe. Due to the high floods, it is thought that ducks will be plentiful this year. Licenses can be obtained at Edw. C. Miller's, this village, who has a large supply on hand.

The licenses are on white paper the same as last year but somewhat longer as on the right hand end is printed "Be careful with fire in the woods and marshes. Extinguish camp fires. Do not throw away cigarette butts in the woods, marshes and highways until extinguished. Save the woods for next year." This is indeed a good warning and if followed out ought to save a number of fires in the woods and marshes this fall.

—Miss Elsie Mertz left for Franklin Thursday where she will be employed at the Mission House.

(Edited by G. Douglas Wardrop, Editor of Radio Merchandise.)

By Placing Binding Posts as Shown, One or Both R. F. Stages Can Be Eliminated.

With the average neodyne receiver, local stations, as a rule, come in with tremendous volume, and one or more stages of radio frequency amplification could be dispensed with and good results still obtained. Regularly, it is not good practice to use any arrangement in a radio frequency circuit to control the separate stages, but in a neodyne circuit this can be done without loss of efficiency. The accompanying diagram shows the method used. Two extra binding posts are employed and are connected to the middle tap on the secondaries of the neodyne transformers, as shown. These binding posts may be placed on a separate

Parts Needed for Flexible Coupler

Specifications for Construction of Attachment for Experimental Work.

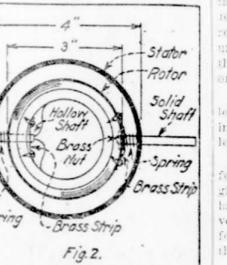

By PETER MOMBELLO

Most variocouplers on the market today are not very flexible and their degree of selectivity cannot be varied to obtain the best results from every hookup. The variocoupler described below is the best that can be made today. Purchase the following parts:

- One-half pound of No. 22 D. C. C. wire.
- One hard rubber tube 8 inches long and 4 inches in diameter.
- One 2-inch rotor ball (this should be in the form of a sphere and not a tube).
- One hollow brass shaft 1/4 inch in diameter, 1 1/2 inches long.
- One square brass nut with 1/4-inch threaded hole.
- One solid brass rod 2 1/2 inches long with thread at one end to fit brass nut.
- Two small brass springs 1/2-inch long to fit shafts.
- Four small brass wood screws.
- Two brass strips with small holes at each end and large hole in middle to fit shafts.

The above specifications must be followed or it will be impossible to construct the variocoupler.

On the 3-inch tube wind 50 turns of No. 22 D. C. C. wire, taking off a tap every 8 turns for 64 turns, and then a tap off every second turn for 16 turns, starting 3/4-inch away from one end of the tube as shown in Fig. 1.

A quarter of an inch away from this end wind every turn possible to get it on with No. 22 D. C. C. wire, but be sure that the two sides are balanced with an equal number of turns for proper calibration of the set afterward. This completes the rotor.

The solid rod is unscrewed from the rotor, the rotor ball is placed into the stator tube and the hollow shaft carrying the leads is pushed through the loosest hole. Then the solid rod is inserted in the opposite hole from the outside of the tube and screwed into the nut in its former position. The brass springs are placed on both sides to keep the rotor in the center. Refer to Fig. 2.

The completed variocoupler is now hooked up in the set. The set is tried for a few days and the results noted carefully. Then the rotor is removed and placed into the next type. Selectivity will surely increase. The rotor is again changed, and then again, until all the holes have been tried and the best ones for each particular kind of work have been found.

This experimentation necessitates long leads from the rotor and the binding posts on the parts to which the leads are connected.

This variocoupler is so flexible that for distance work, the very top holes give the best results, and all others have their advantages down to the very bottom hole, which is supreme for the locals. The changes take less than five minutes.—New York Globe.

In this day of improved tuners it would be well for the fan to know that a tapped coil is far from efficient. Tapping a coil introduces what is known as dead-end loss into the circuit. This loss is detrimental to the operation of a receiver and can be eliminated easily. A coil should be used without taps and a good low loss condenser employed to obtain a wave-length variation.

Always to incorporate all the parts of a receiving outfit in as little space as possible. This is perfectly O. K. from some points of view, but it is unwise to build a compact set that is not going to work as efficiently as hoped.

A power station near your home will also create a good bit of noise in your set. It is quite difficult to remedy such troubles, and the best thing to do is try changing the direction of your antenna or shortening or lengthening it. Changing the "ground" sometimes helps a little. Or the rasping noises may be caused by a loose connection somewhere in the set. Go over all connections very carefully and those that don't look any too good resolder them. Or the whole trouble may be in loose or dirty bearings or improper insulation of the wires in the set itself or the aerial circuit.

A good bit of rasping and scraping noises will be heard in the set during hot weather. This may be attributed to static. So if you thoroughly inspect your receiving outfit and fail to locate trouble the whole fault may lie in the atmosphere.

Distortion and rasping noises are often caused by the sockets and transformer being in too close proximity to each other. The general plan now

TOPCOATS OF BRUSH WOOL; SOME PRETTY ACCESSORIES

FASHION'S latest? Luxurious topcoats knitted of shaggy brushed wool. White is first selection for the all-white ensemble or wrap and hat, making smart appeal this season. Among the handsomest white coats for immediate wear, the knitted kind are especially fetching in appearance. Representative of this new vogue for the all-white coat is the three-quarter length model shown in the picture. If they are ideal if worn with knickers. The shops abound with fascinating dress accessories—scarfs, collars, vests, gloves, bracelets, costume jewelry and all sorts of pretty furbelows. With a vogue for the limit of simplicity in frocks all these become more and more important, taking on new responsibilities. We must look to them to give character and distinction to simple dresses—as much alike as is exquisitely soft and downy, knitted as it is of brushed wool according to latest style mandate. Of course, if one prefers, one may purchase this coat in any of the leading new shades, for brilliant color, as well as white, is being featured throughout all knitted outerwear this fall. Lavinia green, tiffany brown, grays and tans are all popular.

The favor, however, for white knitted tops is evident to a marked degree. In the way of a jaquette, nothing is more fascinating and novel than those knitted of snowy white lightweight brushed wool, colored generously with sheer wool, which bears a very close resemblance to fur. White knitted scarf and hat sets are also very popular. Worn with a coat similar to the model here pictured, the ensemble proves most entrancing.

Typical of the prevailing all-white mode are the swaggar knitted suits, some of which consist of skirt and three-quarter length coat. Others stress the long knitted coat posed over a straight-line one-piece dress, also knitted. Handsome effects are variously expressed by bordering plain mohair knit-coats and skirts with bands of brushed wool. Sheered or lapped leopards or yarn trimmings on brushed wool strikes a really new note of interest in knitted fashions.

White pull-over sweaters, long since an important factor in knitted outerwear, are still "in" and popular. These are worn with plaited white cloth skirts, and for outdoor sports wardrobe and each week sees a new type in the shops. Now indeed is a wide belt of Roman striped ribbon that has a piece of fawn suede across the front extending several inches beyond the buckle on either side.

Somewhat Different A sports hat that is just a little different is of white felt with a band around the crown composed of patch-work flowers in orange and green. The flowers are made of crepe de chine.

Cheesecloth for Dishcloths One of the best kinds of dishcloths are made of cheesecloth. The material should be doubled, raw edges turned in and stitched on the machine. This will wear, and because it cleans so easily is most sanitary. Rinsing in soap and water will be all that is necessary for cleansing.

Extensive Tests of New Cow Feed

Experiments Made by Department of Agriculture at Its Farm in Maryland.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Extensive tests of the value of various new feeds for dairy cows have been made by the United States Department of Agriculture at its experiment farm, Beltsville, Md., and the results are now made available generally in Department Bulletin 1272, just published. Details of the work were carefully planned to insure a fair test. In every case the feed tried was compared with some standard feed as similar in composition as could be obtained, and one that might be replaced by the new feed if found satisfactory.

Fish Meal Found Good. Fish meal, though not so palatable as cottonseed meal, was found to be worth, pound for pound, 25 to 25 per cent more than prime cottonseed meal. The cows would eat all that was offered, and had no effect on the physical condition of the cows were noted. The flavor of the milk apparently was not affected in any way either by exposing the milk to the odor of fish meal or by feeding the cows four pounds of the fish meal before milking.

Peanut feed containing 27.25 per cent crude protein possesses a nutritive value not exceeding 74 per cent of prime cottonseed meal. It is thought that the protein content affords a fairly reliable guide in estimating the value of this feed in comparison with cottonseed meal.

Potato meal is worth not more than 78 per cent as much as cornmeal. The maximum value that can be assigned to velvet bean meal is 65 per cent that of cottonseed meal.

Sweet potato meal appears to be almost as valuable as cornmeal. Potato silage and corn silage were found to possess about the same feeding value.

Apple-pear pulp compared with dried beet pulp was found to be less palatable and less efficient as a feed. Hydrolyzed sawdust is unpalatable, contains but little nutriment and can be fed only in small quantities. The maximum value that can be assigned to the sawdust is 14.5 per cent of that of cornmeal.

Supplementing with Molasses. Supplementing with molasses is not economical. Compared with an equal value of hominy feed the molasses appears slightly less valuable. Molasses renders feeds of poor quality more palatable and induces a greater consumption of nutrients, a matter of importance in feeding exceptionally high-producing cows.

Details of the experiments are contained in the bulletin, which may be had free, as long as the supply lasts, upon request of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

Better Breeders Render Big Service to Industry

There are two classes of people producing pure-bred animals, those who are doing constructive breeding and those who are doing destructive breeding, says Prof. L. V. Starkey, animal husbandman at Clunson college. Those doing constructive breeding are rendering a great service to the live stock industry because they study blood lines, make careful selections, cull the herds intensively and leave the live stock business better than they find it. Those who are doing destructive breeding go at the proposition blindly. They know very little about what constitutes an ideal individual and less about pedigrees. Their herds are poorer when they quit the business than when they began. They believe that because an animal can be registered it should sell for a high price. They place more emphasis upon the registration papers than upon conformation and the ability to produce economically.

Hogging Down Crops Is Quite Economical Plan

Careful experiments have shown that hogging down crops is an economical method of fattening hogs. The average of six trials where hogs were fed ear corn and tankage or wheat middlings in dry lot, compared with hogging down corn, shows that the hogs in dry lot gained 150 pounds per pig per day and required 511 pounds of feed per 100 pounds gain, while the hogs that were allowed to gather their feed gained 150 pounds per pig per day and required only 475 pounds of feed per 100 pounds gain. When the crop is removed much of the fertilizer value is lost, but when it is grazed about three-fourths of the plant food is returned to the soil.

To Prevent Milk Fever Cows Should Not Be Fat

To prevent milk fever, cows should not be allowed to become very fat at calving time. Their ration should be rather light, but should not be changed abruptly. A dose of half a pound of gaulther's salts may be given a day or two before calving, and the dose repeated when the cow becomes fresh. The cow should be watched closely and if the symptoms of milk fever are noticed a competent veterinarian should be called immediately. If treated promptly, cows affected with milk fever seldom die, but the veterinarian must know how to administer treatment promptly and effectively.

Hens Don't Like Rye

Rye is not especially desirable for a grain feed for pullets or hens. Chickens do not care for the taste of rye, and there is not especially concentrated feed value in rye to make it more desirable than wheat, oats or corn. However, barley, kafir and buckwheat are often substituted in a scratch feed mixture for growing pullets or laying hens. The more feed a hen takes, the more she will lay, so that it is a good thing to scatter the scratch feed in straw or roughage.

Keeping Accounts Reveals Weakness

Iowa Farmer Able to Obtain Larger Return for Labor.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

What farmers are doing through keeping and analyzing their farm accounts under the direction of agricultural extension workers is illustrated by an Iowa farmer who, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture, has been able to obtain an appreciably larger return for his labor through changes that a better understanding of the strong and weak points in his farming system suggested. This farmer has kept accounts over two years. He found at the end of the first year that crops which he had fed to live stock brought him more money than when sold outright and that his methods of handling logs were efficient. His figures showed him, however, that his cows were poor, averaging only $34 per cow for dairy products. Comparing his figures with those of other farms in the state, he also found the number of acres cultivated per man on his farm, as well as the number of acres per horse, were below average.

Acting on the information his account book gave him, this farmer rented more land and replanted his twelve small, irregular fields, making them into nine fields of better proportion, so that the crop area per man was increased 26 acres and the area per horse increased three acres. He sold two south sows and bought three cows of good dairy records. When he figured his accounts for the second year and compared the two years, he found that the income from the farm after paying all expenses and interest on the amount of money invested, had been increased over $350.

Department Bulletin on Blood-Sucking Flies

Blood-sucking flies of the family Tabanidae are very serious pests to horses, cattle and other domestic animals. In certain cattle-growing sections of the United States, particularly where swampy areas exist, these horse-flies, as they are generally called, are pests of great economic importance. They not only undermine the health of the animals they attack, but actually transmit dangerous diseases such as anthrax, and occasionally attack human beings.

United States Department Bulletin No. 1218, "Horse-flies: Biologies and Relation to Western Agriculture," by J. L. Webb and R. W. Wells, entomologists, describes the life history and habits of these insects, and suggests remedial measures against them, of which the most important is drainage of swampy areas. Horses and cattle in pasture can be protected to some extent by being driven to higher and dryer arid lands where the flies do not follow them, and horses in harness may be equipped with protective hoods of burlap or light canvas. Live stock owners and others interested can get the bulletin while the supply lasts by addressing the United States Department of Agriculture at Washington.

Poisoning From Ergot Is Menace This Year

Ergot poisoning is a menace this year, according to C. T. Gregory of the Purdue extension department, and the warning he gives might be well worth some consideration from the farmer who is intending to feed rye to any kind of farm animals. Mr. Gregory points out that ergot is easily recognized, and may be seen as one drives along the road. It looks like large beetles or flies on the heads of the grain, but on close examination these prove to be hard blade growths, developed where the seed should be. If these are fed to cattle, they cause a contraction that may result in abortion, but it is not necessary to feed the poison even when it is present. Mr. Gregory shows that a fanning mill will take out the ergot, as the formations of the disease are large and relatively light.

Test Dry Mash Ration

The Indiana experiment station reported that in a test where the birds were all fed the same grain and dry mash ration, the only difference being in the amount and kind of meat food, that a hen fed a ration containing meat scrap averaged 135 eggs, a hen fed a ration containing skim milk averaged 135.4 eggs and a hen fed a ration containing no meat food averaged 122.5. The results of an experiment at Missouri are similar.

Foot and Leg Troubles

Scaly leg and hump foot are two troubles often found in the poultry flock that can be prevented by simple treatments. Scaly leg is a disensed condition most frequently found among older fowls. It is caused by small mites that burrow under the scales of the shanks and feet, where they multiply in great numbers.

YOUR DAUGHTER'S HEALTH

Mothers of Ailing Daughters, Attention

How Two Mothers Helped Their Daughters by Giving them Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Every mother possesses information of vital importance to her young daughter, and the responsibility for the girl's future is largely in her hands.

When a school girl's thoughts become sluggish, when she suffers the consequences of wet feet, pain, headaches, fainting spells, loss of sleep and appetite and is irregular, her mother should have a care for her physical condition and give her Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which has proved a reliable aid to nature for just such conditions in so many cases.

First Bottle Helped Her

Richmond, Indiana.—"I am sending this letter to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did my daughter. She was troubled with nervousness so that she was restless at night, and then she could not sleep and was afraid of everything. She could not work as she was not strong enough, and she had to quit school." "I gave her Lydia E. Pinkham's advertisement in our paper, telling all that the Vegetable Compound had done for other women, so I said, 'We will try it out and see what it does.' She had not taken the first bottle before it began to help her, and we will always say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the best medicine she ever took." Mrs. E. DABY, 911 N. 16th Street, Richmond, Indiana.

An Ohio Mother Reports

Columbus, Ohio.—"When my daughter became 14 years of age she was ailing very much. The doctor gave her medicine, but she was very weak, and he always had to write excuses for her as she could not attend the 'gym' classes, and I often had to keep her home from school. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my nerves and run-down condition, so I gave her three doses daily, and also Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. Our friends are surprised to see how fine and tall she is getting and how well she is. I will gladly answer letters and give you a fine recommendation for other mothers."—Mrs. MARIE MELKE, 614 Eber Street, Columbus, Ohio.

Over 100,000 women have so far replied to our question, "Have you received benefit from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?" 98 per cent. of these replies answer "Yes." That means that 98 out of every 100 women who have taken this medicine have been helped by it. For sale by druggists everywhere.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

WILDERNESS OF THOUGHT

MANY of the highest prized things in life, often through careless neglect or perverted habits, are lost amid a wilderness of weeds, whose rankness had been permitted to overtop a wealthy soil.

Penelope's flower garden, which she elected to call "her own," was beautifully laid out and gave great promise, but in an evil day, when she grew weary of pulling out the tares and watering the buds, the weeds ran amuck and ruined the plot about which Penelope had dreamed for weeks.

When put to the test she preferred the melancholy weeds to the rose and the lily.

And so it was with William, who had planned great things while in college, but the weeds crept in among his cherished ambitions and led him far, far afield in a direction he never suspected.

Up to a long point he was a faithful worker, so given his boyish looks brightened his sky, but when they faded he lost interest and did not care.

Then came the day when the garden was choked with weeds.

He smiled complacently and accepted his fate because he believed in luck. He had never been taught to hold to the anchor of faith.

But William had learned some risky games of chance, and could, when suddenly called upon to do so, shut his mouth very firmly and exhibit not the slightest sign of fear or discouragement.

He meant to be good and true, and

A MYSTERY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

IT HAPPENED on a mystery. Anyway it was so one; On the bank I found a book Down beside a shady bank. Yes, sir, yonder by "the creek" Found a brown crumpled note. How it got there, hard to tell; Maybe out there, maybe fell. There it lay, a book of sums Bearing marks of smudgy thumbs. Looking blindly at the sky Just as though it wondered why. How it got there. That to me Also is a mystery. Near it was a fishing hole. I could swear I saw a pole From the bushes sticking out— It was there without a doubt. Not a split bamboo affair. Just an alder cut somewhere. And it seemed to me the line Wasn't silk, but cotton twine. On the water, seemed to rise. Something else that I could see: Just a cork, a cork of brown. Slowly bobbing up and down. It's a mystery, as I say; For I'm sure there's school today. (© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Chicken Warmen.

Cook a good fat fowl in plenty of broth until tender, adding such seasoning as salt and pepper with a small onion. Remove the chicken and cut up the meat into small pieces. Set away in a warm place. To the broth add two or three cupfuls of finely-cut celery and cook until thick, remove the celery, keep in a warm place and add noodles to the soup; cook until done. To serve, place a nest of noodles on the plate, add a few spoonfuls of celery, and on top place some minced chicken. Serve very hot. A spoonful of mashed potato

"Tanlac has been our constant friend for years, and my wife and myself and eight children are all enjoying wonderful health, largely due to this medicine," is the remarkable statement of Harry H. Pistole, 310 Archer St., Waco, Texas.

"My wife was all broken down in health. But now she weighs 155 pounds, and is strong and well and I am giving Tanlac credit for it. We give Tanlac to the children to tone them up and make them grow, and nobody ever had a healthier set of children than we have.

"In my own case Tanlac has done what seemed to be impossible. When I began taking it my stomach was in such a bad fix that I had to live on a milk and egg diet and I was almost a skeleton. I had been fat on my back in bed and under treatment for 18 months and felt that my time was about up."

"Tanlac is certainly the greatest medicine on earth for anyone whose life is wrecked by bad health. We sure do have a great deal to praise Tanlac for at my house."
