TOUR OF THE KETTLE MORAINES

Otto E. Lay and Don Harbeck of this village were among the 100 who made the tour of the Kettle-Moraine area, located between Sheboygan and Fond du Lac last Saturday. The purpose of the tour was to show what the Kettle-Moraine area of Sheboygan and Fond du Lac counties has to offer as a forest reserve, game refuge and all-around-out-of-door recreational field. It is the intention that legislation will proclaim it a state park. The tour was opened with a luncheon at the Association of Commerce dining room at Sheboygan at which prominent men gave some very interesting talks on the benefits obtained from a state park. After luncheon the tour was made with about 40 automobiles. The area is about 30 miles long and 15 miles wide, containing approximately 10,000 acres, and is well adapted for game refuge.

PHILIP STROBEL DISAPPEARS

Philip Strobel of Plymouth, a former resident of St. Kilian and well known in this community, disappeared from his home at Plymouth on June 26th. Since which time no clue of his whereabouts has been learned by his family or the police department. The Plymouth Reporter of last week's issue gives the following account: "Philip Strobel, residing with his family on South Milwaukee Street, this city, has disappeared from his home, leaving his wife and six children, the oldest 11 years, and the youngest 2 years, in very poor circumstances. He left about three weeks ago and was last seen June 26th, and is 35 years old, 5 feet 7 inches tall, has dark hair and when last seen wore a navy blue suit, soft light blue shirt, light grey cap. He is an experienced blacksmith and has been employed at the Wm. Behrend blacksmith shop, in this city for the past three years, and is also a member of the Hub City Aerie No. 1112 F. O. E., carried a paid receipt of that organization on his person when he left. "He was an industrious worker, and was of good habits, and as stated by his wife had not been ill and was perfectly normal, his mental condition being good when he disappeared. She also stated that their domestic life had been very congenial, and had no cause to leave the family. He had some money on his person when he left and she fears that he has met with foul play. The officers in this city and Sheboygan, and the Metropolitan police in Milwaukee have been notified of his disappearance and asked to be on the lookout for any traces of him. Any information as to his whereabouts, or anyone locating him are kindly requested to notify the police in this city, the Association of Commerce, or the Reporter office."

DEATH OF MRS. ALBERT TESCHENDORF

Mrs. Albert Teschendorf (nee Louisa Schultz) passed away in death at the home of her son Richard in the town of Scott on Wednesday, July 21, 1926. Mrs. Teschendorf suffered a stroke of paralysis about 18 months ago from which she never recovered. On July 17, she had another attack which is attributed as the cause of her death. Deceased was born July 12, 1857 in the town of Auburn. In 1882 she was married to Albert Teschendorf. Shortly after their marriage they made their home on a farm in the town of Scott where she has since resided. Her husband preceded her in death 19 years ago. One son Oscar died 15 years ago at the age of 18 years. She leaves to mourn her demise, one son Richard; two grand children, one brother Frank Schultz of the town of Auburn, one sister, Mrs. Wm. Koepke of Milbank, South Dakota. The funeral will be held Saturday afternoon, July 24, 1926 at 1:30 o'clock from the home of her son with services in the Evang. Luth. Emanuel church. Rev. Kanies will officiate.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Yielding to the urgent wishes of farmers and other citizens of Dodge and Washington Counties who feel that it is time to make a change, I have finally consented to stand for election to the office of State Senator, and will appreciate any support which the citizens of Dodge and Washington Counties may feel inclined to give my candidacy. I will continue, in my event, to use my best efforts to make farming more desirable and living conditions better for all the people. Dated July 20, 1926. W. H. Markham.

ST. KILIAN MAN DROWNS

Mr. and Mrs. Pat Darmody of St. Kilian received the sad news Wednesday of the death of their son William, age 35 years. The young man was employed as night watchman on the U. S. dredge Coleman at the Portage lake ship canal at Houghton, Mich. According to reports received Mr. Darmody came to his death by drowning early Wednesday morning. He is believed to have fallen into the canal while making his rounds of the dredge. His body was recovered several hours later. The remains were shipped to this village Friday morning, and taken to the Clemens Heiders undertaking parlors, from where they were later removed to the family home at St. Kilian. The funeral will be held today, Saturday at 10 o'clock, with services in the St. Bridget's Catholic church. Rev. Vogt of this village will officiate. A complete obituary will appear in next week's issue of the Statesman.

RETURN FROM EASTERN TRIP

Mr. and Mrs. I. P. Rosenheimer and daughters Florence and Ruth, returned home last Saturday from their Eastern trip via automobile. Their route was made by way of Cleveland, Niagara Falls through the Adirondack Mountains, around Lake Champlain, through the Green and White Mountains of Vermont and New Hampshire to Portland, Maine. Thence south to Boston, and to New York by way of the famous Mohawk Trail. Through Massachusetts and down the Hudson. They spent several days at Atlantic City, and while at Philadelphia took in the Sesqui Centennial. Their trip home was made by way of Baltimore and Washington and Mountains of West Virginia and Pennsylvania. The distance covered was 3,800 miles. Mr. and Mrs. Rosenheimer, were well pleased with their trip, experiencing no car trouble during the entire trip. Weather conditions were ideal, making the tour all the more pleasant. The roads were paved and oiled practically all the way. It was a trip well spent, educational as well as enjoyable.

STROBEL-ROMAINE WEDDING

At 4 p. m. Tuesday, at St. Sebastian's church in Milwaukee, occurred the marriage of Miss Alice Beatrice Strobel of Milwaukee, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Strobel, to Dr. Frank E. ## ROAD WORK WELL UNDER WAY

Construction work on County Trunk Line "S", formerly State Highway 26, between Kewaskum and Beechwood, is now well under way. Three construction companies are hard at work repairing and re-locating the road. The Whitewater Road and Bridge Construction Co., has nearly finished the job of building a new concrete bridge one mile south of New Fane. The Blake Construction company is making rapid progress in building new concrete culverts, and will soon have their work completed. The Heagle Construction company of Oakfield, who have accepted the job of grading the road, are making good headway. One marked improvement made so far, and which deserves comment is the taking away of the sharp right angle turn, located about a mile north of this village on the river road, near the Herman Bauman farm home. This corner has always been a dangerous one, and the cause of a number of accidents. The hill near the Glander farm home, one mile south east of New Fane, is being taken down, and the ground used for graveling the road. A number of other dangerous, sharp turns will also be taken out. It is also reported that the road leading over the high ridge between New Fane and Beechwood will be re-located, going away with another dangerous stretch of road.

PYRATOL PETE IN WASHINGTON COUNTY

Pyratol Pete, with his special exhibit car featuring safety in the use of explosives on Wisconsin farms, will be in Washington county on July 28 according to arrangements just completed by H. W. Geiffuss, County Agent. Relative few accidents have occurred in the handling, storing and use of Wisconsin's three or four million pounds of land clearing explosives, used every year. But even few is too many if they can be eliminated. It is with this in mind that the new exhibit car has been made up. The car tells, by picture and by word, the complete story of correct methods in the use of all explosive materials. Washington County farmers arming approximately 3,000 pounds of salvaged war explosives every year. This means that hundreds of men all over the county are handling and using explosives. Familiarity in their use breeds contempt and carelessness which may end disastrously. The fact that a faulty or dangerous method has been used many times with no injury to the blaster, does not mean that it will always be so. That accidents have occurred seems adequate proof that faulty methods were used, because modern explosives materials are almost 100% uniform and safe when used as intended. A safety demonstration will be held in Washington county, at Rosenheimer's store, Kewaskum on July 28 at 9 o'clock a. m. Mark the date down on your calendar and plan to see the demonstration and talk with Pyratol Pete.

BAND CONVENTION SUNDAY

Everything is in readiness for the annual band convention of the North Western Band association to be held at Juneau tomorrow, Sunday. ## JUDGE MARTIN LUECK DIES SUDDENLY

After being ill only a few days, Judge Martin L. Lueck, of Beaver Dam, died suddenly at St. Agnes hospital, Sunday morning at 6 o'clock. Death resulting from clotting of blood in the superior mesenteric artery, which caused gangrene in a large portion of the small intestine. Mr. Lueck was born in 1871 at Juneau, and was the son of a shoemaker who had been discharged with an honorable record after serving in the Civil war. He attended the grade and high schools of Juneau, working in his spare time in the fields and factories to earn his expenses through the University of Wisconsin, from which institution he graduated from the law school in 1894. At the age of 26 years he was elected city attorney of Juneau. In the same year he became court commissioner of Dodge county. In 1899 he was elected district attorney of Dodge county and was made a member of the board of public works. In 1907, upon the death of Judge James J. Dick he was appointed to the Thirtieth judicial circuit bench by Gov. James O. Davidson. In 1906, he was re-elected. In 1922, he resigned to return to private practice. In 1915, following the death of Judge Wm. H. Seaman, Judge Lueck was proposed for the office of United States circuit judge by the late Senator Paul O. Husting. In 1906, when the state legislature elected Robert M. LaFollette to the United States Senate, the Democratic members of the legislature voted for Judge Lueck. In 1924, Lueck was Democratic candidate for governor, losing by a small margin. At the Democratic conference in Milwaukee on June 29 of this year, Lueck was again named the Democratic candidate for governor. Judge Lueck is survived by his widow, Mrs. Harriet Lueck, three daughters, the Misses Ruth and Dorothy Lueck, students at the University of Wisconsin, and Miss Mae Lueck at home, by two brothers, Arthur of Beaver Dam and Robert of Watertown, and by a sister, Miss Clara Lueck court reporter at Juneau, who resides in that city with her mother. The funeral was held on Wednesday afternoon, with services on the lawn at his residence in Beaver Dam. Rev. Rettig of Juneau, and the Reverends W. J. Malcolm and R. H. Owens of Beaver Dam conducted the service. An eulogy was delivered by Burr W. Jones of Madison and former justice of the supreme court. At the close of the services the body was taken to Geneva for burial. At the gathering of the state central committee held at Milwaukee on Tuesday, those mentioned to take Judge Lueck's place on the ticket for governor are: Burr Jones, Madison; former supreme court justice; Vincent Schoenecker of Milwaukee; Adolph Schmitz, Milwaukee; Joseph Martin, Green Bay and John M. Callahan.

CASCADE

John Schleiter spent Tuesday and Wednesday at Milwaukee. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Hellmer and children spent Friday evening at Plymouth. Miss Dala Proefrock has returned home after a two weeks' stay at the P. Kohlman home. Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Dexheimer and Eric Dexheimer of Detroit, Mich., called on Mrs. L. Long Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Kundo and children were called to Brillion Saturday to attend the funeral of a niece, who died after a lingering illness. The members of St. Mary's congregation are going to hold a lawn social and card party on the lawn of the church grounds on Sunday afternoon. The proceeds will go towards purchasing a new organ. Mr. and Mrs. Tom Alex and Mr. and Mrs. Pete Alex and daughter Mary Ann arrived here Tuesday to visit several days at the homes of Mrs. F. J. Murphy and J. H. Alex. On Wednesday morning they were called home by the sudden death of a relative of Mrs. Pete Alex. Friends and relatives in this community were indeed shocked Saturday morning, to hear that Miss Florence Humphrey had passed away in death last Friday night. Her death was sudden, and all day Friday she seemed to be in the best of spirits, attending to her household duties, and at the same time planning to attend a picnic of the King's Daughters at Lake Ellen the following day. In the evening at about eight o'clock she complained of not feeling just right, but refused the attention of a doctor, as the attack was of short duration. A short time afterwards, she suffered another attack and was dead before medical aid could reach her. She was a life long resident of this community, and was the last member of the Humphrey family, except a nephew residing at Colby, Wis., and a niece living in Oshkosh to survive. Deceased was about 60 years old. Her funeral was held on Monday. Rev. Lulu Hindes officiated. Interment was made in the Mt. Pleasant cemetery in the family lot. Gilboy and Smith of Campbellport had charge of the funeral.

WROTE TOO MANY CHECKS

Sheboygan, Wis.—Writing out checks without deposits in the bank to cover the amounts, led to the arrest Friday of a man giving his name as William Raabe, and his address Lomira, Wis. He was brought before Justice Adam Trester and his preliminary hearing was held on Thursday. According to reports Raabe deposited $28 in a Waldo bank and then started out writing checks on this account, which he cashed at that place, until over $60 was discovered to have been collected. Frank Bond, deputy sheriff, arrested the man and brought him to the county jail. Subscribe for the Statesman and get the news of your home community.

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD
WNU Service

It was a wonderfully clear night after the storm—cold and brilliant, with the shadows standing out as clearly as living things. The third idea came to Baree now. He was, like all animals, largely of one idea at a time—a creature with whom all fasses impulses were governed by a single leading impulse. And this impulse, in the glow of the starlit night, was to reach as quickly as possible the fast of Pierrot's two cabins on the trap-line. There he would find Nepeese!

We won't call the process by which Baree came to this conclusion a process of reasoning; instinct or reasoning, whatever it was, a fixed and positive faith came to Baree just the same. He began to mix the traps in his haste to cover distance—to reach the cabin.

It was twenty-five miles from Pierrot's burned home to the first trap-cabin, and Baree had made ten of these by nightfall. The remaining fifteen were the most difficult. In the open spaces the snow was belly-deep and soft; frequently he plunged through drifts in which for a few moments he was buried.

Three times during the early part of the night Baree heard the savage dirge of the wolves. Once it was a wild paean of triumph as the hunters pulled down their kill less than half a mile away in the deep forest. But the voice no longer called to him. It was repellent—a voice of hatred and of treachery. Each time that he heard it he stopped in his tracks and snarled, while his spine stiffened.

At midnight Baree came to the tiny amphitheater in the forest where Pierrot had cut the logs for the first of his trap-line cabins. For at least a minute Baree stood at the edge of the clearing, his ears very alert, his eyes bright with hope and expectation, while he sniffed the air. There was no smoke, no sound, no light in the one window of the log shack. His disappointment fell on him even as he stood there; again he sensed the fact of his aloneness, of the barrenness of his quest. There was a disconcerted slouch to his body as he made his way through the snow to the cabin door. He had traveled twenty-five miles, and he was tired.

The snow was drifted deep at the doorway, and here Baree sat down and whined. It was no longer the anxious, queasy whine of a few hours ago. Now it voiced hopelessness and a deep despair. For half an hour he sat shivering with his back to the door and his face to the starlit wilderness, as if there still remained the feeblest hope that Nepeese might follow after him over the trail. Then he burrowed himself a hole deep in the snowdrift and nuzzled the remainder of the night in uneasy slumber.

With the first light of day Baree resumed the trail. He was not so alert this morning. There was the disconsolate droop to his tail which the Indians call the Akosewin—the sign of the sick dog. And Baree was sick—not of body but of soul. The keenness of his hope had died, and he no longer expected to find the Willow. The second cabin at the far end of the trap-line drew him on, but it inspired in him none of the enthusiasm with which he had hurried to the first. He traveled slowly and spasmodically, his suspicions of the forests again replacing the excitement of his quest. He approached each of Pierrot's traps and deadfalls cautiously, and twice he showed his fangs—once at a marten that snapped at him from under a root where it had dragged the trap in which it was caught, and the second time at a big snowy owl that had come to steal bait and was now a prisoner at the end of a steel chain. It may be that Baree thought it was Oshonabesha and that he still remembered vividly the treacherous assault upon a puppy, he was dragging his sore and wounded body through the mystery and fear of the big timber. For he did more than to show his fangs. He tore the owl into pieces.

There were plenty of rabbits in Pierrot's traps, and Baree did not go hungry. He reached the second trap-line cabin late in the afternoon, after ten hours of traveling. He met with too very great disappointment here, for he had not anticipated very much. The snow had banked the cabin even higher than the other. It lay three feet deep against the door, and the window was white with a thick coating of frost. As this place, which was close to the edge of a big barren, and unsheltered by the thick forests farther back, Pierrot had built a shelter for his firewood, and in this shelter Baree made his temporary home. All the next day he remained somewhere near the end of the trap-line, skirting the edge of the barren and investigating the short side line of a dozen traps which Pierrot and Nepeese had strung through a swamp in which there had been many signs of lynx. It was the third day before he set out on his return to the Gray Loon.

He did not travel very fast, spending two days in covering the twenty-five miles between the first and the second trap-line cabins. At the second cabin he remained for three days, and it was on the ninth day that he reached the Gray Loon. There was no change. There were no tracks in the snow but his own, made nine days ago.

Baree's quest for Nepeese became now more or less involuntary, a sort of daily routine. For a week he made his burrow in the dog-cave, and at least twice between dawn and darkness he would go to the birch-bark tepee and the chasm. His trail, soon beaten hard in the snow, became as fixed as Pierrot's trap-line.

And then, of a sudden, Baree made a change. He spent a night in the tepee. After that, whenever he was at the Gray Loon, during the day he always slept in the tepee. The two blankets were his bed—and they were a part of Nepeese. And there, all through the long winter, he waited. The winter passed, and spring came, and still Baree continued to haunt his old trails, even going now and then over the old trap-line as far as the first of the two cabins. The traps were rusted and sprung now; the thawing snow disclosed bones and feathers between their jaws; under the deadfalls were remnants of fur, and out on the ice of the lakes were picked skeletons of foxes and wolves that had taken the poison-baits. The last snow went. The swollen streams sang in the forests and canyons. The grass turned green, and the first flowers came.

All these things were happening, and the birds had mated and nested, and still Nepeese did not come! And at last something broke inside of Baree, his last hope, perhaps, his last dream; and one day he bade good-by to the Gray Loon.

No one can say what it cost him to go; no one can say how he fought against the things that were holding him to the tepee, the old swimming-pool, the familiar paths in the forest, and the two graves that were not so lonely now under the tall spruce. He went. He had no reason—simply went. It may be that there is a Master whose hand guides the beast as well as the man, and that we know just enough of this guidance to call it instinct. For, in dragging himself away, Baree faced the Great Adventure.

It was there, in the north, waiting for him—and into the north he went.

It was early in August when Baree left the Gray Loon. He had no objective in view. But there was still left upon his mind, like the delicate impression of light and shadow on a negative, the memories of his earlier days. Things and happenings that he had almost forgotten recurred to him, as his trail led him farther and farther away from the Gray Loon; and his earlier experiences became real again, pictures thrown out afresh in his mind by the breaking of the last ties that held him to the home of the Willow. Involuntarily he followed the trail of these impressions—of these past happenings, and slowly they helped to build up new interests for him. He came to the blind canyon up which Nepeese and Pierrot had chased him. That seemed but yesterday. He entered the little meadow, and stood beside the great rock that had almost crushed the life out of the Willow's body, and then he remembered where Wakayoo, his big bear friend, had died under Pierrot's rifle—and he smelled of Wakayoo's whiteness.

"Ghost-Fear" Strong Among Real Romanys

If, during a country stroll, you come to a clear-running stream or river, and notice at the bottom a collection of broken crockery, kettles, pans, and so on, you may be sure that a gypsy camp is near, and that a gypsy has died there.

On that day after the funeral of a real Romany, the relations burn all the clothes and other consumable belongings of the dead person. Then all the crockery and utensils are broken and solemnly thrown into the nearest running water.

Behind this queer custom lies "ghost-fear." It is believed that, so long as any of the possessions of a dead gypsy remain intact, his ghost will "walk" and ill-luck and misfortune will dog the camp. Sometimes, so strong is this superstition, even the horse of a dead gypsy is destroyed.

Gypsies never utter the names of the dead and for a long time after a death will not eat or drink anything that was a favorite of the departed. This is "ghost-fear" again.

Rarely, if ever, are flowers placed

Alphabetic Pill Cure

A city of London druggist has simplified illness enormously. He provides an emergency compact medicine case in which each bottle of pills is distinguished by a letter of the alphabet.

All that the purchaser has to do—whether he travels or merely stays at home to be ill—is to diagnose his symptoms, run a finger rapidly up and down the list of 51 ailments supplied until he finds his own, and cast his glazed eye smartly to the right.

There he will discover the letter of the alphabet which is marked on the bottle that contains the pill that will make him again the man he was—respected by his family and loved by his friends. If, for example, he is racked by hay fever he will take "one B every hour; suck S every hour."

bones where they lay scattered in the green grass, with flowers growing up among them.

And now, for the first time in many weeks, a bit of the old-time eagerness put speed into Baree's feet. Memories that had been hazy and indistinct through forgetfulness were becoming realities again, and as he would have returned to the Gray Loon had Nepeese been there so now, with something of the feeling of a wanderer going home, he returned to the old beaver-pond.

All through the month of August Baree made the beaver-pond his headquarters. At times his excursions kept him away for two or three days at a time. These journeys were always into the north, sometimes a little east and sometimes a little west, but never again into the south. And at last, early in September, he left the beaver-pond for good.

It was almost December when Lerue, a halfbreed from Lac Bain, saw Baree's footprints in freshly fallen snow, and a little later caught a flash of him in the bush.

"Mon Dieu, I tell you his feet are as big as my hand, and he is as black as a raven's wing with the sun on it," he exclaimed in the Company's store at Lac Bain. "A fox? Non! He is half as big as a bear. A wolf—oui! And black as the devil, M'sieu."

McTaggart was one of those who heard. He was putting his signature in ink to a letter he had written to the Company when Lerue's words came to him. His hand stopped so suddenly that a drop of ink splattered on the letter. Through him there ran a curious shiver as he looked over at the halfbreed. Just then Marie came in. McTaggart had brought her back from her tribe. Her big, dark eyes had a sick look in them, and some of her wild beauty had gone since a year ago.

With scarcely a sound that the others could hear Marie had whispered into the Factor's ear, and folding his letter McTaggart rose quickly and left the store. He was gone an hour. Lerue and the others were puzzled. It was not often that Marie came into the Factor's log house, and each time that he saw her Lerue thought that her face was a little thinner than the last, and her eyes bigger and hungrier looking. In his own heart there was a great yearning. Many a night he passed the little window beyond which he knew that she was sleeping; often he looked to catch a glimpse of her pale face, and he lived in the one happiness of knowing that Marie understood, and that into her eyes there came for an instant a different light when their glances met. No one else knew. The secret lay between them—and patiently Lerue waited and watched. "Some day," he kept saying to himself—"Some day"—and that was all.

Lerue was thinking of this when McTaggart returned at the end of the hour. The Factor came straight up to where the half dozen were seated about the big box stove, and with a grunt of satisfaction shook the freshly fallen snow from his shoulders.

"Pierre Eustach has accepted the government's offer, and is going to guide the map-making party up into the Barrens this winter," he announced. "You know, Lerue—he has a hundred and fifty traps and deadfalls set, and a big poison-bait country. A good line, eh? And I have leased it of him for the season. It will give me the outdoor work I need—three days on the trail, three days here. Eh, what do you say to the bargain?"

"It is good," said Lerue. "Yes, it is good," said Roget. "A wide fox country," said Mons-Roule.

"And easy to travel," murmured Valence in a voice that was almost like a woman's.

Food for Thought

Three meals a day, or possibly even two, are all that a brain worker should indulge in, according to Mr. Charles E. Hecht, secretary of the British Food Education Society.

Mr. Hecht delivered a lecture on the diet of educationists recently, in which he said that the commonest error of the individual teacher was indulgence in "those abominations, sweet and sloppy milk puddings," and in bread and milk. Milk was food for babies and not for men.

One point Mr. Hecht emphasized. He said that a man who was working specially hard should take less food rather than more, and that if he were over-tired it might be advisable to skip a meal.

Legal Wisdom

Lawyers have some odd experiences. A good citizen died. The last request he made of his wife was not to let the undertaker twist his lips so he would appear to be smiling. "I've not had a very good time in life," said he, "still I don't want it to appear I am tickled to go." But when the undertaker got through with him there was a trace of a smile on the man's face and the widow wanted the lawyer to tell her what to do. The answer depended upon wisdom rather than on precedent. The lawyer said: "Do nothing. What your dead husband doesn't know won't hurt him."—Capper's Weekly.

Why It Is

"I cannot understand," mused Professor Pate, "how it is that women are almost invariably regarded as superior to men." "Because they say they are, of course!" promptly replied old Gauntion Grimm.—Kansas City Star.

WIDE BRIMS NOW IN FAVOR; DAINY FROCKS FOR TOTS

WHERE and how far are you going, my pretty maid, in this crowd of wider brimmed hats? That is the question that is keeping designers of millinery awake nights. The pretty maid may not know just where she is going, but she is on her way toward the revival of elegance in millinery, and it looks as if she were beginning to revel in wide brims. There is no telling the duration of these revivals, when the feminine mind wakes up to find itself intrigued by long earrings—and has maidenhair fern and small roses silhouetted against the crown and brim. Fashion has thrown big hats into the ring of style and there is no disputing their beauty and elegance.

Since the little tots must "pretty up" occasionally in party clothes, mothers are always hunting the shops in search of dainty frocks for special occasions. They do not expect anything startlingly new in design or unfamiliar in fabrics, but they are pleased by wide-brimmed hats, bobbed hair or what not. Some French modistes are already predicting the wide brim for fall and winter. In the meantime milliners are encouraging the pretty maid to go as far as she likes in the matter of brims; they, too, are reveling in the revival of picturesque styles.

The group of midsummer hats shown here begins with the big and airy cartwheel sailor with brim of even width all round. It is a half-braid shape bound with ribbon and has a collar of narrow ribbon ending in a little bow and short ends at the right side. Many trimmings this season keep entirely to the right, but this sailor supports a large chou at the left—made of organdy, or equally delicate fabric, that looks light enough to float away like a small cloud. These hair-brim hats are displayed in white and pastel colors and are immensely becoming, a choice of the right color will do wonders for the complexion.

By way of varying the wide brim, the hat below at the right has an odd, upward flaring silk drape on the upper brim, pointed at the front and finished with needlework. A little chiffon rose is pressed against it. One expects the wide brim to be droopy and many of ingenious management of materials and new tricks in decoration. They find pretty furberles and finishing touches in ribbons and flowers or in embroidery and other needlework on simply designed dresses of delicate materials.

Voile and crepe de chine in pastel colors or pale tints stand at the head of the list of dainty materials approved for party frocks; but georgette crepe, dotted swiss, fine bistre, dimity and taffeta silk bear them company. Net and narrow laces contribute something along with needlework, ribbons and touches of embroidery by way of elaborating the simple designs, but just now fashion looks with greatest favor on decorations of self-material and combinations of two colors in one material for little party frocks.

When georgette or chiffon makes the dress, tiny posies, ruchings and puffs are made from the same materials, although they may not be the same in color, and set on in borders or other decorative designs. Platings and smoking are popular, also petal trimmings or applique figures in contrasting colors.

Party frocks are usually sleeveless and quite short. Usually they are worn over little slips in the same color. When the choice falls on embroidery as a decoration little flower there are, like the hair-braid hat shown with collar of silk garnished with applique motifs. Below it at the right, georgette crepe makes a dignified model with large and small flowers massed on the crown. One can imagine many beautiful color combinations in a hat of this kind. A lovely and becoming shape of hair braid finishes this little summer millinery poem. It is turned up at the back motifs are chosen, usually showing small sprays or wreaths. Handsewing and handwork are at a premium on little children's dress-up clothes. No one begrudges the simple needlework that gives distinction to frocks like that pictured here. The yoke is smocked and hand-run tucks are grouped at each side.

Beige Worn With Black

Black and beige is a color combination much in vogue among the smartest women. Black appears on the frock and suit, with the lighter tone used in the accessories and hosiery, as well as the hat.

In All Lengths

Fringes were never more popular than now and are seen extensively on afternoon and evening coats as well as on frocks.

Modernistic Earrings

The newest earrings reflect the modernistic tendency. They are made of gold or silver and the designs are the curious motifs exploited so extensively in modern decoration.

In Black and Red

A charming French importation consists of a snappy frock of black and white checked taffeta and a coat of red kasha cloth, lined with black and white.

The Kitchen Cabinet

Never give up! There are chances and changes. Helping the hopeful, a hundred to one; And, through the chaos, high wisdom arrangements. Ever success, if you'll only hold on.

FOOD FOR TODAY

Cream puffs made very small and filled with creamed cheese are delicious accompaniments to a salad.

The onion being one of our most valuable vegetables, should be used freely all through the year. Prepare tender new onions for a salad by slicing and seasoning well, then cover with sweet cream and serve. A sprig of parsley eaten after onions will remove the objectionable odor.

Onions Stuffed With Nuts.—Cook even-sized onions in boiling salted water until tender. Remove the centers, chop them and mix with butter, chopped nuts and bread crumbs. Fill the onions with this mixture and pour around them a thin cream or rich milk, or any broth; bake as usual.

Strawberry Bouches.—Cover tinball molds with rich biscuit dough and bake in a hot oven. Fill with warm with crushed and sweetened strawberries, top with a meringue and brown in a moderate oven. Garnish with quartered berries and serve well chilled.

Vienna Steak.—Take half a pound each of veal and lean beef; chop, season well with salt, pepper, onion juice and a grating of nutmeg. Cook over coals or under gas. Serve with creamed butter and paprika spread over the steak.

Marmalade Tart.—Fill a pastry-lined plate with any desired marmalade—apple, plum or grape. Cover the top with rings cut from a cored peeled apple. Sprinkle with lemon juice and sugar and bake for half an hour. Serve with spoonfuls of whipped cream, or cream cheese in each ring of apple.

Filled Rolls.—Cut a slice from the top of rolls, scoop out the centers, brush with melted butter and fill with any creamed dish such as fish, chicken or vegetable. Sprinkle with parsley and serve.

Cook string beans for several hours with a piece of fat, salt pork. Season sometimes with minced parsley, onion, chives or cheese.

Koumiss.—Dissolve one-fourth of a yeast cake in a fourth of a cupful of water and add it with a third of a cupful of sugar to a quart of new milk. Stir until the mixture is well blended, then put into bottles, tie down the corks if used and put in a warm place to stand for twenty-four hours. Open carefully and serve in small quantities. In extreme cases of nausea, koumiss has often saved much suffering as it is retained by the weakest stomach.

Foods for Occasions. We are looking for something new and when a combination a little unusual is presented, we wish to try it.

Squab Mirabeau.—Prepare squabs as for roasting, broil five minutes in broiler, then remove them. Sift them down the back without breaking the breastbone, season with salt and pepper, cover with egg crumbs and cook in butter fifteen minutes. Garnish with small onions and potatoes browned in butter.

Braised Tongue.—Cook beef tongue slowly for two hours or until tender, skin it and put it in a casserole. Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, add three of flour and cook until smooth; add a pint of broth in which the tongue was cooked and a pint of stewed and strained tomatoes. Cook until thick, adding one chopped onion and a half a carrot finely minced, half a tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, a few dashes of red pepper and the tongue. Cover and simmer for two hours. Serve from the casserole.

Raspberries a la Astor.—Take two cupfuls of raspberries, add a little lemon juice and powdered sugar and a pinch of nutmeg. Mix thoroughly with whipped cream and flavor with maraschino. Sprinkle with pistachio nuts finely minced; place on ice to chill for two hours before serving.

Peach Pudding.—Pour a cupful of hot milk over a cupful of dried bread crumbs and let stand five minutes; add a half cupful of sugar, the well beaten yolks of three eggs and the stiffly beaten white of one. Mix well firm. Heap thinly sliced peaches well sweetened over the top and cover with a meringue made of two egg whites and three tablespoonfuls of sugar. Cover the pudding with the meringue and bake a delicate brown. Cake crumbs make a more delicate pudding.

Another nice peach dessert is bird's nest pudding. Make a biscuit batter and pour over sliced peaches. Bake and invert the pan. Add sugar and butter and serve.

Scalloped Potatoes With Sauces.—Arrange scalloped potatoes in a baking dish and over the top place small sausages. Bake until all are well done. Serve from the baking dish.

Thrushes Long Singers. Among birds the thrush has perhaps the greatest singing endurance. A thrush has been known to sing 16 hours a day. A blackbird, however, has been found to have the best rhythm and sense of time, and his tune is said to be the best also.

Highest Qualities. Let not the emphasis of hospitality be in bed and board, but let truth and love and honor and courtesy show in all thy deeds.—Emerson.

Scraps of Humor

JUST WHAT HE WANTED

"What sort of a neighborhood is this?" "Excellent. Some of the best people in town live in this section." "That may be, but what I want to know is: Can they afford to have things that we can't afford? I'm tired of keeping up with other people; I want to try living where I shall set the pace."—Toronto Globe.

Quick Footwork

"Hello! Hello! Is this you, Mac?" "Ay." "Is this MacPherson I'm talkin' to?" "Ay, speakin'." "Well, Mac, it's like this: I want to borrow $100." "All right, I'll tell him as soon as he comes in."

CAN TELL BY HIS LOOKS

Ethel—Can you tell a man's age by his looks? May—Why, yes—by what he looks at.

Not Then

At call—love. "We give the laugh; Save when it's love. Of the golden calf."

A Tip

A certain busy hardware merchant, whose time is worth money, has a good method of dealing with barbers. As soon as he is seated in the chair he says: "Cut the whole three short." "What three, sir?" asks the barber. "Hair, whiskers and chatter," replies the hardware dealer.—Good Hardware.

Time Killers

Gotrox—Harold, what do you mean by telling that book agent I was not in?" Office Boy—But, sir, when you gamble you say always to— Gotrox—Use your brains once in a while. Didn't I receive a permit last week to carry a revolver?

MISUNDERSTOOD

She—We women are always misunderstood. He—Well, no woman ever tries to make herself plain, does she, now?

Intrusions

Thorns dwell amid the roses sweet; The clovers' fall of thistles. My radio outfit is repliate With idiotic whistles.

Discipline Gone Astray

"He used to write in his copy book, 'Honesty is the Best Policy.'" "Did it improve his morals?" "No. But it improved his penmanship so that he became a successful counterfeiter."—Washington Star.

Those Dear Girls

"Tell me just what sort of a man your fiancé is, Clara?" "Oh, he's everything that's nice." "I'm so glad. You know I've always said that people should marry their opposites."

Free as Air

Old Lady—Have you any incumbrances? New Maid—Not on your life! No petticoats, no corsets, no long skirts, no hairpins.

Making It Easy

Judge—Your fine will be $300. Prisoner—Will you give the easy payments on it, Judge? I'll pay you $10 a month until it's paid. Judge—Sure, and you can handle your job sentence the same way. Ten days a month for six months.

Persona Non Grata

He—Would you like to dance this one? She—Yes. Would you mind hunting up a partner for me?

Worth the Price

"Life is too darn expensive," growled the man who had just been handed his bill. "Still," retorted the doctor, "judging from the hurry calls we doctors get most people must think it is worth the price."

Same Thing

Daughter—If I can't have Alfie Nit-witt for a husband I want nobody. Father—Well, where's the difference?

TRIES TO CLIMB LIGHT POLE

An automobile accident was the direct cause of interrupted electric service in a wide area covering parts of four counties on the night of July 8th. According to the electric company linemen who were rushed to the scene, a machine crashed into a line pole a mile south of Slinger, at 8:05 p. m. The impact tore three high tension wires from the insulators, and a short caused one of them to burn down. Slinger, Addison, St. Lawrence, Woodland, Rugby Junction, Brown Deer, Thiensville and Grafton were affected.—Hartford Times.

Insect Killer and Repellent
These Things Are True of "Dairymen's Fly-Kil"

- "Fly-Kil" quickly kills every fly fairly hit with the liquid or enveloped for a moment in the gas.
- When properly applied "Fly-Kil" is effective as a repellent for from 24 to 36 hours after application. Read and follow instructions carefully.
- "Fly-Kil" is pleasant to use; has a sweet smell; is not harmful to the hands of the user; contains no phenol cresote, tar, nor carbolic acid.
- "Fly-Kil" will not stain nor mat the hair of cattle. When correctly applied as a finely divided spray, it leaves the coat soft and glossy and will not blister nor burn the hide.
- "Fly-Kil" will not readily taint dairy products and no such difficulty will result if reasonable care is used to prevent the spray from settling directly into dairy utensils.
- "Fly-Kil" is equally effective as a killer and repellent against fleas, mites, mosquitoes, bedbugs, cockroaches, and certain other insect pests.
- "Fly-Kil" is valuable for winter use because it can be depended upon to rid cattle of lice and keep chicken lice out of the poultry house.

Our Gain

Our profit on a bale of binder twine doesn't amount to much—in fact, it is probably considerably smaller than any other merchant would accept on any sale of equal volume. Of course, there are some brands of twine on which we'd make more money than we do on Deering—but our ultimate gain wouldn't be as much.

No, we don't make much profit on a bale of Deering twine although it sells for just a trifle more than some other twines. But we do gain considerably by supplying our customers with this reliable high-quality product because of the greater satisfaction it gives the user.

It means a good deal to us to have your good will. That's why we prefer to sell you good binders and good twine to go with them, because no binder will work satisfactorily with inferior, poorly spun twine. You are safeguarded against length shortages, poor tying and breakage, when you use

TWO WOMEN FOUND HELP

By Reading Experiences of Other Women

Mrs. Nina Matteson, Box 205, Oxford, N. Y., writes:—"If it had not been for your medicine, I could not have done my work as it should have been done. Mother told me of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I had read in different papers what it had done for different women. She wanted me to try it, so my husband got me one bottle at first; then I took two others. Now I am feeling quite strong again."

Mrs. Ernest Tanquay of Adams, Mass., says she was ill for four years and could not sleep nights or go out on the street. She read about the Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. After taking eight bottles she was able to do all her work and go anywhere and is quite herself again. This dependable Vegetable Compound is a household word in thousands of homes. The fourth generation is now learning the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. For more than half a century, this reliable medicine has been used by women with very satisfactory results. If the Vegetable Compound has helped other women, why shouldn't it help you?

Sweet Clover Is Best for Forage

More Valuable for Pasture and Green Manuring Than for Hay Crop.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The recent sudden increase in the growing of sweet clover in the northern United States has brought many inquiries to federal hay inspectors and to hay dealers regarding the marketing of baled sweet-clover hay. The acreage of sweet clover available for harvesting this year is the largest ever known, while the heavy plantings that were made this spring will result in sweet clover being one of the leading forage crops in the country in 1927. Most of this sweet clover will be used for pasture or for plowing under. Some of it, however, will be cut for hay, and the surplus above farm requirements will be offered for sale.

Hay Not in Favor.

Sweet-clover hay is not held in high favor in the leading hay markets and dealers report much difficulty in disposing of the sweet-clover hay consigned to them. The United States Department of Agriculture reports that no official standards or grades have been established for sweet-clover hay and that no such grades are contemplated for the immediate future. The very evident lack of market interest in sweet-clover hay is due to the fact that hay from this crop heretofore offered for sale has been of very low quality and of poor condition. Practically all of it has consisted of an unattractive mass of coarse, woody stems, almost devoid of leaves and the stems, often badly weathered or moldy, and obviously of low feeding value.

The principal buyers of legume hays, including the clovers and alfalfa, are dairymen, and these demand hay that is fine-stemmed and leafy, sound, and of good color and of high palatability and feeding value. Sweet-clover hay may be so produced as to have all of these characteristics, but the type of hay usually placed on the market would be largely wasted if fed to dairy cows. Most buyers will not consider it even for bedding.

Cause of Poor Quality.

The cause of the poor quality of sweet-clover hay lies partly in carelessness in harvesting and partly in the nature of the crop itself. Sweet clover is a biennial plant, making a moderate growth the first year and a very large and rapid growth the second year. Most of the hay is made from the second-year crop. When harvested at the right time this second-year sweet clover will make very good hay if properly cured, but the curing and storing of sweet clover so as to obtain good quality hay is very difficult. The harvesting must be done just as the flower buds are forming, and the interval during which this curing is usually not more than three or four days. If cut too early the crop is too succulent and almost impossible to cure without spoiling. If cutting is delayed until the flowers appear the stems become overripe. Such stems are coarse and very fibrous and dry so slowly in the swath that most of the leaves wither and fall off before the hay can be put into the barn. If the sweet clover is stacked or placed in the mow at that stage of curing when the leaves are clinging to the stalks, the stalks will be so sappy as to start a strong ferment that often develops on the inside of the hollow stems. Unfortunately, the harvesting usually comes at a season when farmers are too busy to watch the sweet clover closely. As a result very little second-year sweet-clover hay is saved in good condition. Recent investigations have disclosed, furthermore, that second-year sweet-clover hay, which for any reason has become spoiled, is likely to cause severe and often fatal poisoning of cattle. The trouble is thought to be due to a fungus or mold which develops on the inside of the hollow stems.

All of these conditions may be improved somewhat by planting the yellow sweet clover or one of the early white varieties, like the Grundy County. Instead of the common white species. In general, however, second-year sweet clover hay is being looked upon with increasing disfavor. Although it may be used in an emergency for home-farm use, it should be cultivated to compete with alfalfa and red clover as market hay.

First-Year Cutting.

A good word should be said, on the other hand, for sweet-clover hay cut the first fall following a spring planting. In a good season and on moist soil one and sometimes two cuttings of excellent hay may be obtained in August and early September. This hay is fine-stemmed and leafy, of first-rate appearance and feeding value, and comparable in every way to good alfalfa hay. In fact, it has been offered on one market as "near alfalfa." The only objection to first-year sweet-clover hay is the grain stubble which it may contain. If the seedling is with a nurse crop.

This can be avoided by planting the sweet clover alone or by cutting it higher than the stubble. Cutting should take place not later than the middle of September, since much food material in the stems and leaves, including the valuable protein, is carried to the roots in late fall for storage over winter.

The value of sweet clover for pasture and green manure is very great. In these respects the crop is unexcelled. The utility of the crop for hay is doubtful, especially for market hay, when it must compete with such well-known legumes as alfalfa and red clover.

Pack in Light Room

Always pack eggs in a light room. This allows for the detection of any that are thin-shelled or have cracks. Eggs are sometimes found which have shells that were cracked before they were laid. They have been partly repaired but the cracks still show. An egg of this kind is easily overlooked in a dark room but may be seen in the light. It pays to pack a uniform product. If there are two grades, keep the good and the poor separate, otherwise you may get the low price for all of them.

SOME VISIBLE SIGNS OF BINDER TROUBLES OUTLINED BY EXPERTS

Nebraska Experts Give Few Good Pointers.

According to farm machinery experts at the Nebraska Agricultural college, a careful observation of the following "ifs" will secure better operation and less trouble:

1. If the machine travels with a jerky motion, main drive chain is too loose or it may be dry. Try a little oil on it.
2. If the slats rip off the canvas, the elevators are not square.
3. If the knottor hook is rusty and rough, it will not work properly. Polish it with fine emery paper.
4. If the binder attachment is not timed properly, it will not work. Some binders are timed in as many as five places.
5. If the knottor hook does not turn far enough to close the fingers on the twine, no knot will be tied. Look at the knottor pinion. It should not be worn.
6. If the twine slips through the cord holder, the twine will be pulled out before the knot is tied. Adjust the cord holder spring. It should take 40 pounds to pull the twine from the disk.
7. If the disk does not move far enough, the knottor hook grasps only one cord, hence a loose end band.
8. If the needle is bent or out of shape, there will be a loose end band.

Grain-Cleaning Device Described in Bulletin

Apparatus, called a Bates aspirator after its inventor, E. N. Bates, market specialist of the Department of Agriculture, automatically removed smut and light dockage from grain by suction as a part of the threshing operation.

In this attachment the grain as it is thrown from the threshing elevator is spread out into a thin, even stream by being directed onto a low inverted cone. The cone causes the grain to pile up and flow evenly over its edge. Suction from above draws a current of air through the thin sheet of falling grain and lifts out the light material.

Need for the removal of smut and dockage at threshing time is emphasized by the fact that there was approximately 1,739,000 bushels of dockage assessable against 118,645,000 bushels of wheat produced in Washington, Idaho, and Oregon during a recent year. Of this dockage total approximately 764,000 bushels were of smut dockage. The department says the needle is of malleable iron and may be hammered back to shape.

9. If the twine is pulled from the hook before the knot is tied, try the knife, if you like the dull.

10. If you wish to change too size of bundles, do it with the bundle-size spring, not the tension or compress spring.

How Are Calves Raised Profitably for Market?

Many farmers think that at the present price of milk and veal, it does not pay to produce veal, therefore, many calves are "denuded." On the average it will take ten pounds of milk to produce one pound of gain in a calf. If milk is $2.00 per hundredweight, then every pound of gain costs 20 cents. If it were not for realizing on the original weight of the calf, every pound of veal would be produced at a loss. Suppose a calf weighs 75 pounds when it is born, and by feeding it to marketable age you increase its weight to 150 pounds. You have increased its weight 75 pounds, and it has taken at least 150 pounds of milk, worth $3.00. You sell the calf for 14 cents a pound, or $21. You have realized $3 for the original weight of the calf, less the expense of feeding and the cost of marketing, for had you "denuded" the calf you would have received nothing for the carcass, except, possibly, 50 cents for the hide.

FARM NOTES

Shallow cultivation is best for row crops, as it does not injure their roots so much as deep stirring.

With shingles, as with anything else, it's false economy to use an inferior grade.

Dogs now may be immunized against rabies. Ask your local veterinarian and insure the peace of mind of yourself and your neighbors as well as prevent "mad dog" scares.
