Why Loop Antenna Returns to Favor

Improvements in Receiver Design Aid in Making Plan Practical.

By L. M. CLEMENT

Chief Engineer, Radio

Perhaps the mystery of loop operation always will stir the interest of the lay person. That a small wooden frame wound with a comparatively few turns of wire can act as an antenna for a receiver and pick up without any other connection a certain station, either local or distant, is indeed marvelous.

It brings to mind the story of the New England farmer who witnessed his first demonstration of the electric light late in the Nineteenth century. He marvelled long at the idea of light coming from a box connected by two wires to a small glass bulb. After deliberation, he admitted that it was wonderful, indeed, "what they thought up," but for the life of him could not understand how they made "the kerensse flow up the wires!"

Loop Returning.

A review of receiving set apparatus placed on the market within the last few months reveals the incorporation of several distinct and outstanding features which were not present a year ago.

Among the more obvious changes is the increasing use of a loop, or, as it is technically known, a coil antenna. The coil antenna either has supplemented or wholly displaced the outside aerial for method of "pick-up" with certain types of receiving sets.

Characteristically, the use of the coil antenna dates back to the time of the first radio experiments. In fact, the first designs of transmitting and receiving apparatus called for a form of coil antenna. The lack of the modern means and practices of high amplification prevented successful experiments at that time except over extremely short distances.

Just before and during the war, with the advent of high amplification, the loop came into prominence, particularly because of its directional characteristics and its portability. Today we find navigation depending to some extent upon the advantages and use of the coil antenna in connection with directional compass work.

A few years ago the loop antenna as a means of "pick-up" was restricted and used in radio receivers for broadcast reception. At that time, when the introduction of radio broadcast reception in itself was considered such a phenomenon, the loop probably enjoyed its favor in large measure due to its "novelty" appeal, rather than the possible advantages it possessed in simplicity of operation or installation.

In the final analysis the receiver of that day was usually of the four or five-tube design and did not permit the degree of satisfactory loop operation which could be obtained with the regulation outside antenna. Since performance is the predominant factor in determining the worth of a radio receiver in the end, the loop gradually but steadily waned in public favor.

Loops in Modern Receivers.

Many recent improvements in receiver design have contributed to make the operation of a receiver on a loop antenna entirely practical, and this furnishes the impetus which is gradually but surely re-establishing the loop as a "pick-up" on the modern receiver.

Probably the most important development which has influenced the use of the loop in commercial practice since 1918 is the introduction of full and complete metallic shielding which permits the high radio-frequency and audio-frequency amplification necessary for its successful operation.

The coil antenna is very efficient as compared to the outside antenna and only a fraction of the voltage induced in the outside antenna is induced in the loop. To obtain the same volume from the speaker with this smaller initial pick-up, sufficient amplification to compensate therefor, must be obtained.

When loops first were in favor, the addition of more stages of radio-frequency amplification to provide the sensitivity necessary for loop operation could not be satisfactorily accomplished because of lack of the necessary knowledge. Since then, the employment of multi-stage tuned radio-frequency amplifiers of the shielded type made possible the use of the loop as a means of pick-up.

Even a casual observation of the styles in radio today brings to light the increasing use of the loop operation. The tubes are extinguished. If this is not done an exceedingly high voltage called the "open-circuit voltage" will be established that is likely to damage the transformers. With the "100" tubes a voltage on open circuit is likely to "crash" every tube in the set unless the eliminator controls are well turned down.

Full control of all voltage stages, as provided with certain eliminators, makes it possible to get the best results with all sorts of tubes ranging from the WT-12, 100 tubes and up, and the individual requirements of the tubes. A very low voltage, not to exceed 80 volts, must be held on the WD-12 dry cell tubes, while a full 200 volts will be required for the new power tubes X-112.

Thus we find the pendulum of public choice again swinging back, and the loop operated receiver is seen everywhere today. In the higher-price apparatus, where use is made of seven or eight tubes, the loop is used almost entirely for operation as the amplification provided is sufficient for the reception of even the more distant stations.

Let us digress for a moment to explain loop operation. In short, the advancing radio wave is made up of two components, one electric and one magnetic. The magnetic field surrounds the station in a horizontal plane.

An apt illustration is the magnet in the pond analogy. When the loop is pointed toward the source, the magnetic field will strike the loop at right angles, and a maximum of the magnetic field will be enclosed by the loop. This field is changing and, in similar fashion to the coil in a transformer, has a voltage set up in it. This voltage is then amplified by the receiver. When the loop is turned at right angles to the line between it and the transmitting station, none of the field cuts through the loop and therefore no voltage is developed. Without a voltage set up in the loop there is no effect upon the receiving set.

This easily explains not only the pick-up action but serves to illustrate its directional properties. The directional effect of loop operation naturally helps in securing additional selectivity. Under the present crowded air conditions full benefit can be taken of this directional effect by turning the loop to exclude the undesired station, provided the desired station does not lie in the line between receiver and the undesired station.

In the large cities, where but limited space is available, outside antenna construction is often impossible, and where barriers of steel preclude the possibility of proper reception with the inside antenna the loop then comes decidedly to the fore.

A large factor in the growing preference of loop operated receivers is the ease of installation and possibility of portability. Many such loop sets have found their way into other places than the home.

Even in cases where loop operation has proved very successful, the "unsightliness" objection has been expressed by the critical set user.

Present-day practice has done much to overcome this objection. The loop is now mounted on a bracket which can be swung out of sight or cleverly worked into the cabinet itself. Or, if it is to be permanently exposed, it is set on the par, from a furniture standpoint, with the set itself. In conclusion, we can say that once more, loop operation is coming into favor due in large measure to the latest practices of engineering and design which have been constantly at work to provide better and better apparatus for public enjoyment.

Some Valuable Pointers on Soldering the Joints

Good solder joints are important to radio sets. The amateur set builder who has had no previous recourse to the use of soldering will shudder at much unpleasant experience if he follows a few elementary requisites.

The parts which are to be soldered must be cleaned to brightness and a sufficient amount of good flux should then be applied. Examine the soldering copper to see that it is clean and that the tip is properly tinned. If a copper oxidized, but take care that it does not become brilliant, otherwise the tinning will burn off and a process of cleaning and retinning must be gone through before it is again serviceable. Using an electric soldering copper simplifies matters a great deal, as these maintain a fairly constant temperature.

Fit the parts which have been prepared and then place them in the desired position for joining. Put some solder on the tip of the copper and while firmly holding the parts together apply the copper to them. When finished, wipe with a cloth to remove residue of flux. A good joint appears smooth and inconspicuous and exerts a maximum of binding efficiency and electrical transfer.

Generally speaking, storage batteries are divided into three classes: Planté cells, Fauré cells and alkaline cells. These are further subdivided, according to construction, into lead sulphuric cells, lead copper cells and alkaline zinc cells.

Moving "B" Eliminator May Stop Interference

When installing a power "B" eliminator it should be remembered that it should not be placed too close to the receiving set, from two to three feet, sometimes being required to prevent interference and humming.

The metal cover should always be removed to restrain the magnetic field set up by the eliminating transformer, for in most eliminators the cover is designed on to act as a shield for the apparatus. Complaints in respect to humming and other noises are most frequently the result of snugging the eliminator close up to the receiver cabinet.

As a rule the binding posts on the eliminator are plainly marked in agreement with the receiver posts to which they are to be connected. In operating the eliminator one must be very careful to turn on the buttery switch on the receiver to light the tubes before the eliminator switch is turned on, and in the same way the eliminator must be turned off before the tubes are extinguished. If this is not done an exceedingly high voltage called the "open-circuit voltage" will be established that is likely to damage the transformers. With the "100" tubes a voltage on open circuit is likely to "crash" every tube in the set unless the eliminator controls are well turned down.

Should Be Short and Direct

The grid return of all circuits should be as short and direct as possible, as well as the lead from the grid condenser to the grid of the detector tube.

Waders Quite Necessary in Fisherman's Outfit

Next to a good rod and line, the most important part of the trout outfit, as far as comfort goes, is a pair of light-weight waders with a pair of hob-nailed brogues, says Field and Stream.

It is not only a matter of personal comfort; it's a matter of good fishing to have waders. Instead of tooting along, with the water slopping into his boots in comparatively shallow water and being forced to cast an abnormally long line because he can't get within proper distance of his fish, an angler can wade to the correct fishing position in waders. He can still be dry and comfortable, and keep his mind on the fishing instead of the footing.

Get waders big enough in the feet so that several pairs of wool socks can be worn under them, and big enough in the waist so that coat tails can be stuffed in. Always dry waders inside and out. Don't leave them in a duffle bag; hang them up. Instead of trying to make ordinary patches stick on them, take them to a tire vulcanizer and have him coat the worn spots and leaks liberally with good live rubber. The spots won't look ugly but they will last. Keep your brogues well oiled so they won't stiffen up; also keep them full of soft iron hob-nails. The coat should be a collection of pockets with a pair of sleeves—not little dinky pockets but good big fat ones. Short wading coats don't amount to much.

Cobb Says Bob Wallace Had Most Baffling Way

Ty Cobb, greatest of all modern base runners, says Bobby Wallace is the only infielder he couldn't outguess nine out of ten times. "By closely watching the position of a man handling a throw I can instantly tell what sort of a slide will best help to avoid the touch of the fielder."

"It was different with Wallace. If he threw bent the runner, it was next to impossible to escape the touch with Wallace handling the ball. "In some way he would move up the line, and then so get the ball on you that aside from touching you he would make you miss the bag as well."

Strict Discipline for Cornell Varsity Crews

Strict discipline, harmony and cooperation are the keywords of Jim Wray's policy as coach of the Cornell crews. In organizing the candidates for the spring campaign, Wray laid great stress on the necessity of observing training rules, and paid tribute to Cornell's famous old coach, Charles E. Courtney, as a great disciplinarian. The training rules, Wray said, must be obeyed to the letter.

Abu Zabal Golf Course

Desert sheiks and Bedouin shepherds are freak hazards on the Abu Zabal golf course. Sand is plentiful and a rule allows players to brush sand away until at least three-quarters of the ball is exposed. The fairways are all sand, but the sand greens are covered with baked mud. When the course was established tin tee boxes were stolen for use as water buckets. The boxes were perforated and the natives left them alone, as they were useless for water.

TRAINING WILL HELP SPRINTER

Expert Says Condition and Form Are Big Factors.

A Charlie Paddock, an Arthur Duffy may be born with spiked shoes on his feet, but the average college sprinter who dashes to his ten and four-fifths flat is pretty generally four parts training to one part native ability.

At any rate that is the opinion Carl Easton Williams, famous athlete and physical culture expert who writes in the American Boy Magazine, arrived at after training his son, Russell, to be the fastest runner of his school. It is an opinion that should serve to encourage many boys who suspect at times that they weren't born hundred-yard men.

Mr. Williams points out that condition and form are the two main factors in running and that of the two the former is the most important. Charlie Paddock found that invariably when he bettered his form his speed increased. "After he thought he had acquired his greatest speed," Mr. Williams writes, "he tried lifting his knees—and world's records fell. Sometimes, when running his best, Paddock has hit his chin with his knees."

But Paddock himself admits that condition is even more important than form, and that it is a serious mistake to go into athletics without the proper preliminary training. "For," says Mr. Williams, "bear in mind that a hundred-yard dash at maximum speed is the most concentrated and stupendous effort of which one is capable."

"Don't try to crowd a year's training in three weeks," the American Boy Magazine article continues. "It can't be done. If you plan to go out for track this spring, get busy in a gymnasium now. When you do start the actual training don't try to do everything the first day. Build your strength gradually. Quarter-mile college men seldom run a full trial quarter against time during the period of training."

Mr. Williams emphasizes the fact that a good sprinter is symmetrically developed, that he runs with his whole body and not just with his legs alone. And this is where the element of form comes in. He says: "Really, form is efficiency, and in most branches of athletics this means getting the whole body into it, using the strength of every part."

After a boy gets in condition comes the actual training in the technique of the hundred. And here was where Mr. Williams was able to give his son, Russell, many tips which he himself had only learned from experience.

He showed him the trick in getting set of throwing the weight far forward on his hands, so far forward that he could balance on his hands without changing his position. This, according to Mr. Williams, was Arthur Duffy's pet trick and was largely the secret of his flashy get-away.

Regarding the start, the article in the American Boy Magazine says: "Don't jump. Start running with short, even strides, going off in 'low gear,' with your body forward; then gradually straighten up as you work into 'high gear.' Keep your head forward; never throw it back or up."

In training his son Mr. Williams particularly stressed the value of relaxation. "If you're tense and rigid you can't start well, because you must relax your muscles before you can contract them for the push off. However, if you'll train yourself to relax while waiting for the gun you'll likely get off to a perfect start every time."

Discussing the finish when you're nearing the tape, Mr. Williams says: "Charlie Paddock has a trade mark, as it were, in his finish. It's a tremendous leap and Charley has explained that in dozens of cases he has won races in the last ten or fifteen yards, sometimes coming up from behind, with this jump at the tape."

"Although it really doesn't matter," Mr. Williams concludes his article in the American Boy Magazine, "whether you win or lose in a good contest, provided you have the fun of the game, there is no satisfaction in losing because of mistakes in training. The big value of athletics lies in this lesson of the supreme importance of preparation—and in the discipline that goes with it."

Help Kidneys By Drinking More Water

Take Salts to Flush Kidneys and Help Neutralize Irritating Acids

Kidney and bladder irritations often result from acidity, says a noted authority. The kidneys help filter this acid from the blood and pass it on to the bladder, where it may remain to irritate and inflame, causing a burning, scalding sensation or setting up an irritation at the neck of the bladder, obliging you to seek relief two or three times during the night. The sufferer is in constant dread; the water passes sometimes with a scalding sensation and is very profuse; again, there is difficulty in voiding it.

Bladder weakness, most folks call it because they can't control urination. While it is extremely annoying and sometimes very painful, this is often one of the most simple ailments to overcome. Begin drinking lots of soft water, also get about four ounces of Jad Salts from your pharmacist and take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast. Continue this for two or three days. This will help neutralize the acids in the system so they no longer are a source of irritation to the bladder and urinary organs, which then act normal again.

Jad Salts is inexpensive, and is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and is used by thousands of folks who are subject to urinary disorders caused by acid irritation. Jad Salts causes no bad effects whatever.

Here you have a pleasant, effervescent lithia-water drink which may quickly relieve your bladder irritation.

A fussy diner called the waiter and said, "I want a nice lamb chop. Give my compliments to the chef and ask him to do his best for me. Tell him to put a little piece of fat on the top when he grills it, so that it will melt and make it juicy. I don't want it burnt up—just nicely done, with plenty of gravy. Tell the chef exactly what I require, won't you?"

"Yes, sir certainly," replied the waiter. Then he shouted down the speaking tube: "One chop, Joe!"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Might Have Hit Kaiser

Had Annie Oakley been a poor marksman she might have ended the career of the former Kaiser of Germany while he was still a crown prince. She was in Berlin with Buffalo Bill's show and she skipped a machine to accept the crown prince's invitation to go to the palace gardens and shoot a cigarette from his mouth. Standing fifty yards from Annie, the prince lighted a cigarette and took two puffs, then signaled her to blast away. She lifted her rifle to his shoulder, drew a perfect bead and fired. The bullet flicked the ashes from the end of the cigarette, leaving a four-inch stub sticking in his mouth.

First Real Help in Seven Years

A victim of stomach trouble for seven weary years, Mrs. O'Day had tried almost every known remedy. None helped till she tried Tanlac. Now happy, healthy again, she praises this great natural body builder.

Speaking of her long illness and rapid recovery, Mrs. O'Day said recently, "Seven years of indigestion and stomach disorders had brought me down to where I was so weak and nervous that my housework was almost beyond me. I lived on a very restricted diet, but even then I would have such bad attacks of stomach pain and nausea that I could keep scarcely anything down. I also had frequent dizzy spells, couldn't sleep and was growing weaker all the time."

"My brother advised me to try Tanlac, and I'm glad I did. From the first I felt its good effects and five bottles in all put me in my present splendid health. Tanlac is great! I praise and recommend it all the time."

Pays for Itself in Better Crops

Even if you have only a small farm the New Idea Spreader will make you enough money to pay for itself and give you a profit besides.

Scientists and experiment stations have determined that the value of manure from $5 to $10 per animal. Ordinarily half of this is lost through absorption in the hayrack and through improper spreading with a fork. Save this half by using a New Idea Spreader and you'll save $300 to $400 a year even on an 80 acre farm—more on a larger place.

That's why you should increase your profits by spreading with the

NEW IDEA

Registered U.S. Pat. Off.

Spreads 7 Feet—Across 3 Corn Rows

The wide spreading New Idea saves you half a mile of travel per acre. It spreads beyond the wagon tracks and you don't have to drive over the spread manure. It spreads uniformly and the spread can be varied 3, 6, 9, 12, 15, 18 loads per acre merely by pushing a lever.

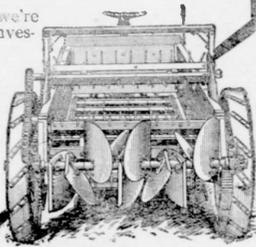

The double cylinders and distributor take two whacks at the manure. Every particle goes under the ground—none left to freeze or rot. There is no danger of clogging so the New Idea can be loaded as high as the ordinary wagon box. Strong chain conveyor brings the manure unerringly to cylinders. Cannot slip from under load and will not race going up hill.

Chain drive—no gears to freeze, break or strip. Power to conveyor and spreader mechanism is derived direct from rear axle—no side strain or lost power.

The New Idea is made by spreader specialists with more than 16 years experience, who have the confidence to back their machine with a 1 year guarantee on workmanship and material. We unhesitatingly recommend it.

See This Spreader

Let us show you how it works and you'll understand why we're so enthusiastic about the New Idea. It costs you nothing to investigate and you will not be urged to buy against your will.
