CHAUTAUQUA NEXT WEEK

Beginning next week—Wednesday evening and continuing until Saturday evening, August 4th, the United Chautauqua Company of Des Moines, Iowa will stage daily programs here. The company showed here last year and made a very good impression. They did the same at Campbellsport and West Bend this year, and there remains no question that their program will be very good here this year. A large number of season tickets have been sold, and prospects for a good attendance looks favorable. The large tent will be pitched on the vacant lot between the Bank of Kewaskum and the Otto B. Graf drug store on Main street. Following is the program to be given:

Wednesday evening, August 1st, at 8 o'clock: Six Musical Moors orchestra. An orchestral musical sensation featuring Baby Harold Chester, six-year-old musical marvel, trap drummer and comedian. A merry carnival of popular and classical musical hits, generously spiced with fun. This orchestra is what is termed in the parlance of the theatre as a "wow."

Second day in the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock: Dixie Players. Thomas Elmer Lucy, Cartoonist and humorist. At 8:00 p. m., "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Lucy gladdens your heart with his chatter and chalk talks, catchy songs, funny stories, and mirthful character portrayals of famous men. In the evening, the funny sayings of Lorelei Lee, the famous, beautiful, blond vamp and "see-cracker" will be the talk of the town. The sparkling dialogue of this play has literally doubled up millions with laughter. Funny? Yes—there never was another play just like it.

Third day in the afternoon: J. Franklin Babb, in France with the army he was billed as the best speaker in the A. E. F. With his wonderful knowledge of an ever puzzling humanity, his earnestness, his sincerity, his keen wit and his powers of eloquence, he always wins. And Russell's Collegians. A male trio from Canada, presenting vocal, instrumental and comedy features, with elaborate stage settings and costumes. Mr. Russell is the possessor of the Governor-General's gold medal as Canada's greatest baritone. These rickety, jolly boys will carry you off your feet with their snappy liting music and screamingly funny stunts.

Fourth day, afternoon: C. E. Booth, community building and community selling from a business and agricultural standpoint. As executive of the Better Government staff of Chicago, he is in a position to supply startling revelations and "inside dope" on the gangsters, racketeers, bombers and corrupt political grafters of Chicago's underworld.

In the evening "Pigs." Would a litter of sick pigs spell happiness to you—if you were young—and in love—oh, very much so? See "Pigs" for yourself and laugh—laugh—and then decide. A wonderful story of youthful love, sacrifice and devotion. There is laughter to follow each tear. Awarded the honor of being the cleanest and finest offering of the American stage in 1928.

Announcement!

In announcing myself as a candidate for the office of County Treasurer, I feel that those who are not acquainted with me will welcome information as to my past life, business connections and therefore submit the following for your earnest consideration:

I was born in the town of Herman, Dodge county, February 3, 1887. I am a married man with a family of three children, and have been a resident of Washington county since 1914, when I purchased a 136-acre farm in the town of Wayne. Upon this property I have invested several thousands of dollars in improvements and converted it into the leading stock farm of this section. I am a member of the Wayne-Theresa Dairy Herd Improvement Association, of which I was president for two years of the Four-Corner Dairy Co. of the town of Theresa, and for the past three years I have been secretary of the same corporation. I have been chairman of the Town Board of town of Wayne since 1921 and for the past three years a member of the Washington County Highway Commission. In the capacity of town chairman I have served as a member of the Washington county agricultural committee since 1921. I feel that my contact with the public has always been agreeable and always for the public's interest. My connections with county affairs has familiarized me with the affairs of public office and I can assure everyone that if I am honored by the nomination as the primary that I will make a clean vigorous campaign in the general election and if recorded with this high office that I shall administer its duties honestly, impartially and economically.

The old iron bridge, which for many years served its purpose across the Milwaukee river on East Main street in Kewaskum is no more. On Thursday morning, Robert Yoost, county bridge builder, put his crew of men at work taking it out and by this morning the job will undoubtedly be completed. Work of building the new cement bridge will be started next week. The new structure will be 80 feet long and 43 feet wide from railing to railing with a 30 foot road bed. LARGE BARN DESTROYED BY FIRE

Fire which started at about seven o'clock Tuesday evening, completely destroyed the large barn, machine shed, pump house and one silo on the Elmer Stage farm, located about four miles east of Batavia, in the town of Sherman, Sheboygan county. The fire it is thought started from a gasoline engine, which was in operation in a pump house standing close to the barn. Mr. Stage who was doing chores in the barn at the time, noticed the fire so rapidly that nothing could be done to save the building from destruction. With the barn, which was modernly equipped, some of last year's hay and 65 loads of this year's crop, some grain and some farm machinery were destroyed. JACKSONVILLE WAGE SCALE IN DISCARD

United Mine Workers Allow Districts to Make Own Negotiations.

Indianapolis.—The United Mine Workers of America abandoned the Jacksonville scale as a basis for wage negotiations in the bituminous coal fields and extended to each one of its districts, the right to effect settlement with coal operators "upon a basis mutually satisfactory."

The policy committee's action may result in an unprecedented situation in miners' union history—the existence of different wage scales in different districts.

The scale of $7.50 per day and $1.05 per ton, which passed into the discard by the committee's action, was set by the federal coal commission in 1920 and since has been effective in union operated bituminous mines. It was reaffirmed in the famous Jacksonville agreement of 1924.

When the Jacksonville agreement expired April 4, 1927, coal operators were clamoring for a reduction in the union wage. The United Mine Workers in Indianapolis on January, 1927, set forth a policy of "no reduction in wages" and on April 1 a general suspension resulted.

The new policy is interpreted as a gesture by the union toward bettering the depressed conditions in the bituminous coal industry. The coal operators, harassed by loss of markets, have contended they could not afford to operate their mines under the Jacksonville wage agreement. As a consequence production has fallen heavily.

The action of the committee, it was believed, will have the same effect as the demands made by the coal operators at the wage conference at Miami, Fla., shortly before the expiration of the Jacksonville agreement. The operators at that time demanded a wage scale "continuously competitive" with nonunion labor costs.

Doctor Work will now be entirely free for his duties as chairman of the Republican national committee. He has wound up, as far as possible all matters pending at the interior department, and leaves Mr. West a clean desk.

NOT MUCH TO SEE

E. Berry Wall, who was known in his youth as "king of the dudes," strolled one spring morning on the Monte Carlo terrace with his chow dog and a New York friend. "The way the women are dressing this year is awful," said the New Yorker. "Such thin, transparent fabrics! Such short skirts! Look, there's the young Countess Caraway, sitting by the Berlitz bust. Now Wall, honest—Isn't that gown of her's awful?" "I don't know whether it's awful or not," And Mr. Wall checked and tugged at his obstinate chow dog's leash. probably hid the copperplate there to safeguard her copy of the bookplate—that is, so that her copy would never be shown up by some engraved one being struck from the copperplate; she must have realized that, with everybody thinking the table was a dummy, the copperplate would almost certainly never be disturbed, especially if she hid the key, too. I tried the sewing table yesterday after I'd tried Julia's boxes, and given her the chance she wanted to talk to you and Peter. And there was this copperplate, all carefully packed into the little drawer, so it would never rattle, with this paper!"

Dramatically she produced an old, stained, yellow sheet. Bending our heads over it, the captain and I deciphered the following legend:

"To Dr. Charles Grosvenor
"From
"Hugh Colfax.
"This bookplate, in profound gratitude.
"In his peaceful home, may he recall the great days of the Macedonian and the Esmeralda."

This was pure Greek to me, but the captain started back in amazed recollection.

"The Esmeralda?" he cried. "Why, that ship's one of the most famous prizes in England's nava. history! She was captured off Callao by the British fleet that went to the aid of the revolutionists of Chile in 1820. We've got it at last, I believe! Colfax's son must have been there!"

"He was!" I cried. "Never mind how I know; that can wait. But afterward he fell a victim to yellow fever, and his life was saved by Doctor Grosvenor, then an American naval surgeon. Though just how he happened to be on the spot I don't know—"

"I do!" broke in Nancy, determinedly. "Julia told me. That ship on the bookplate is the Macedonian, the doctor's ship, which was on a voyage and lying off Callao at the time of the action between the Esmeralda and the British fleet."

"But," I objected—I had been examining the copperplate closely again—"the Macedonian was a very famous American ship, Nancy, and Captain Ashland says this is a British-built frigate—Oh, my gosh!"

Just too late I perceived that my wonderful memory had not been quite wonderful enough. The sincerity of my contrition was such that the intelligence of my expression was overlooked by Nancy, who saw that she must quickly forestall questions hovering on the wholly perplexed captain's lips.

"Speaking of prizes," she said lightly, "the Macedonian was one too; it was captured in the War of 1812. . . . Oh, you remember now, do you, Constance? I guess you didn't take many prizes in history, did you?"

"That nice Captain Ashland smiled his sweetest smile; in fact, he laughed aloud."

"Then the last of the bookplate mystery's solved," he declared, "thanks to Miss Burton!"

"How?" I demanded, recovering my speech.

"Since the Macedonian was a prize captured by America in the War of 1812, that accounts for its being British-built."

"Oh, dear! Then we're finished with the bookplate!" sighed Nancy, picking up the copper plate regretfully. "I haven't," said the captain.

"How so?" she asked.

"Because I've really just began an account of it. It had great influence, you see, in forming my decision to stay here."

"Here?"

"Yes, I'm staying indefinitely. My uncle always urged me to come, but my first morning here I wasn't very keen on it, I must admit. I felt put off a bit; safer in the war, what? But then you—and Miss Fuller, of course—drew my attention to the bookplate, and so I've decided to stay and help in the business on this side. I telephoned my uncle my decision last night and I must be off now to see him, for he said he'd be here early to welcome me. I believe I'll have time to learn the business and do some other things I want to, now that Almy says he's through with me."

"Mr. Almy is through with you?" I ejaculated. "Why, what do you mean Captain Ashland? You weren't helping solve the Grosvenor mystery, all this time? And I never knew it!"

"Helping?" repeated the captain, dazedly. "I say, were you in it, too? I had no idea!"

"Oh, I didn't do much," I demurred feebly.

"See here," said I, severely; "how long has Mr. Almy known, anyhow, that that book was an object of interest to the Grosvenor connection?"

The captain chuckled delightedly. "Good joke on all of us, what? Why, you know, his interest in the case started when he heard Professor Harrington was among those present; of course, he knew about him personally, but he also remembered that the police had been called in when Harrington's library was robbed, some years back. So he reads that case over, to refresh his mind; and then, when he walks into my uncle's office, last Monday noon, there's one of the very books that was stolen, lying on the desk! And then, with all the Grosvenor clan rushing hither and yon for Virginia, the rest was easy."

"Oh, was it?" said I.

"Of course it was, when he had so much help from experts!"

"Mr. Almy," observed Nancy, irrelevantly, "told me one day to take care of my fine brother. So I did."

"We were puppets in his hands!" I murmured.

"Positive puppets," beamed the captain. "Going up, are you, Miss Burton? Do tell me how you took care of your brother!"

So young England and young America departed, each with a prize; or perhaps America had two, for Nancy bore off the Colfax copperplate. Miss Fuller, you see the paper this morn'g? A dark hand held out Daily Snapshots. "Bookshop Mystery" ran the largest caption: "Crew's Denouement," above an enlarged reproduction of the spring lanceet.

"Is that there a crew, Miss Fuller?" inquired Ullyses, indicating the instrument.

"Yes, Ullyses." With sudden determination I resolved to ask him one question; he seemed communicative, for him. "Have you ever seen Miss Harrington, too? I mean, as well as her grandfather?"

"No," didn't know her 't all," denied Ullyses. "Well, I knew Professor Harrington, of course."

"You mean, down in Virginia," Fortune favored the bold. Ullyses proffered a single confidence:

"Yas'm; my old father, he lived with the Harringtons. They had elegant big white house all full of red-satin furniture. I loves grand furniture." Then he was gone with his Snapshots, leaving me with my thoughts and catalogue proof, which lasted me until late that afternoon, when, true to form, Mr. Roberts interrupted on the telephone.

"Are you busy?"

"No," I answered, also true to form. Then I was kindly to come to Mr. Darrow's office. Not once before in nine years had I been summoned to the Presence. I wondered why Mr. Darrow should take the trouble to fire me personally, but marched into his cherrywood headquarters and faced him and Mr. Roberts with all the composure I could muster.

"Ah! Miss Fuller!" said Mr. Darrow, as if he wasn't quite sure. "Sit down. Now, in reference to that bookplate—You know what I meant?"

"I think so," I murmured.

"Miss Fuller showed considerable intelligence in that connection," interrupted Mr. Roberts.

"All Almy's efforts seem to have been crowned with success," said Mr. Darrow, hastily. "I have been glad to exert my poor influence to obtain for him the vacation he has long desired to spend with his worthy aged parents on their picturesque Maine island. I would not see one who has exerted himself in behalf of the cause of justice and my house remain unrewarded."

"Then don't forget Ullyses!" said I. And, swearing both my astonished hearers to secrecy, I outlined Ullyses' epic of devotion, for such his whole course of conduct during the previous week had to be accounted. Without analyzing too closely the ethical aspects of his delay in identifying Mr. Grosvenor, it could be seen that it had won a certain advantage for Julia, by giving Ullyses time to sound Mr. Case and win his friendship for Mary Grosvenor's daughter. For he knew that Julia was also the daughter of Miles Harrington, without doubt. If the Harringtons had been his father's "family," if, thirty-odd years before, he had seen the professor, then a boy, down in Virginia, he must have known Miles, too; and an old colored nurse, long years a Grosvenor retainer, who had tended both Mary Grosvenor and her little daughter, had been sent home to Virginia for giving that child information that was to be kept from her. Far more important information, confided by that dying mother to her old nurse, must have gone the rounds of the log cabins in Elliot's Crossing, and found its way north again to one who secretly knew the gray-haired professor as more than one of the details of life in Darrow's.

And finally, Ullyses, seeing the spring-lanceet under my desk that Thursday, had undoubtedly recognized it in some way. Exactly how, would never be known. Yet it might be safely assumed that his old father, with the interest in bodily ills characteristic of his race and class, had told Ullyses over and over again of the fine young naval surgeon who once, long ago, by means of a strange little brass box full of knives, had cured him of pleurisy. And it was the more likely that Ullyses had heard this story frequently because this admirable doctor was so strangely one of these no-count Grosvenors no Harrington retainer would have had use for. And so Ullyses, seeing the spring-lanceet under the desk, and knowing the suspicion hovering over Julia and the evil reputation of her grandfather, had kept the secret in her defense.

"He must be rewarded," proclaimed Mr. Darrow, as I finished. "His discretion has safeguarded the interests of my house in aiding a favorable outcome of the investigation, and he has been loyal indeed to the former benefactors of his family."

"He expects a set of red-satin furniture," said I.

"He shall have it at once. Your interesting story, Miss Fuller, confirms me in the desire I have to discuss with you a certain matter, since it shows you have won esteem in widely varied classes of society—an asset, indeed. By the way, you have heard of the gratifying offer I have received for Claribeth's "Notes"?"

"Not yet."

"Magistrate Judges will give six hundred dollars for it. I let him have it for that figure; he desires it for a special purpose. He was particularly attracted to it by the significance of the substitute bookplate which you so astutely inserted, that bearing the motto "Invictus," most appropriate for his political purpose. You understand me?"

"Quite."

"I think, Miss Fuller, you do ordinary things rather well."

"Thank you."

"Now, with my nephew's most gratifying decision to remain here on my account, we shall unquestionably be in a position to increase our international business through his connection. He believes, accordingly, that it would be well if a reliable and experienced person could be sent to England very shortly for six months, to observe the conduct of Ashland's business, so that we might get their point of view as he is getting ours. Now, how do you feel about it? You understand me?"

"Captain Ashland's judgment is excellent, I am sure," I replied caustically, though nearly suffocating from heart failure.

"Ah! It interests you?"

"It sounds most interesting."

"Well, Miss Fuller, I am well impressed on the whole with your conduct in important matters during this past week. I am wondering if I could trust you with something larger."

"I should be so glad," I murmured humbly.

"I do not wish to startle you; but the fact is, I should like you to undertake this mission, I believe you have enough intelligence to serve my interests well."

"I'll say," said I, "you ought to believe it!"

"I assure you, Miss Fuller," said Mr. Darrow, soothingly, "you have my entire confidence!"

The KITCHEN CABINET

(By 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)
"We climbed the height by the zigzag path, and wondered why—until we understood it was made strong to break the force of the hill."
"A road straight up would prove too steep. For the traveler's feet to tread; the thought was kind in its wise design. Of a zigzag path instead."

EVERY DAY GOOD THINGS

A simple sponge cake is easily digested and one that may be given to the children of the aged.
Berwick Sponge Cake.—Beat the yolks of six eggs until light and lemon colored, add one cupful of sugar gradually, beating well, using a Dover beater. Add one tablespoonful of lemon juice, the grated rind of half a lemon and the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. When the whites are partially mixed remove the batter and carefully cut and fold in one cupful of flour mixed and sifted with one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Bake in a slow oven.

Cheese Crotons.—Cut stale bread in one-third inch slices, removing the crusts, spread with butter and cut in one-third-inch cubes. Put into a dripping pan, sprinkle with grated cheese and place in the oven until delicately browned, stirring frequently, to have them brown evenly. These are nice to serve with any bouillon.

Sweetbread and Cucumber Salad.—Parboil one sweetbread, adding two slices of onion. Cool and cut into cubes, removing all of the connecting tissue. Add equal amount of cubes of cucumber. Beat one-half cupful of thick cream until stiff; add one-fourth teaspoonful of gelatin soaked in one-half tablespoonful of cold water, then add one and one-half tablespoonfuls of vinegar, and the sweetbread and cucumber mixture, mold and chill.

Curried Apples.—Wipe, core and pare six sour apples and arrange in a baking dish. Mix one-half cupful of brown sugar and one tablespoonful of curry powder, and one tablespoonful of butter, melted. Fill cavities with the mixture, pour three-fourths of a cupful of chicken stock in the dish and bake, basting often until the apples are soft.

Tea Pretzels.—Use the dough left from sweetbreads, kneading it lightly and then roll into a thin sheet. Sprinkle a little granulated sugar over and press it in lightly with the rolling pin. With a pastry wheel or knife, cut the dough into strips seven inches long and one-half inch wide. Form the pretzels by bringing the ends together toward the center and cross them, curve a little when placed on the baking sheet. Bake slowly. A little anise or caraway strewn over the sheet before the cakes are placed will add variety.

A Few Fish Dishes.

Seafood served as cocktails, soups, chowders, salads or main dishes, are always well liked. Try Fish a la King.—Take two cupfuls of any cooked fish, well flaked. Simmer one-half cupful of green pepper sliced, one tablespoonful of pimento and one-half cupful of celery cut into bits, all in a tablespoonful of butter. When tender add one tablespoonful of flour, stir and cook. Then add one cupful of rich milk and salt and cayenne to season. Serve on buttered toast, after adding the fish.

Baked Fish Custard.—Prepare a custard of a pint of milk, two lightly beaten eggs, salt and pepper to taste with two cupfuls of flaked cooked fish. Canned fish may be used for this dish as well as cooked fresh fish. Mix all the ingredients and pour into a well buttered baking dish. Bake in a slow oven until firm. Serve hot.

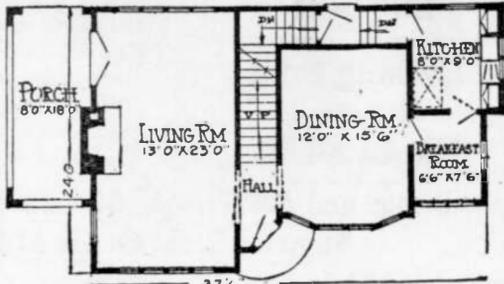

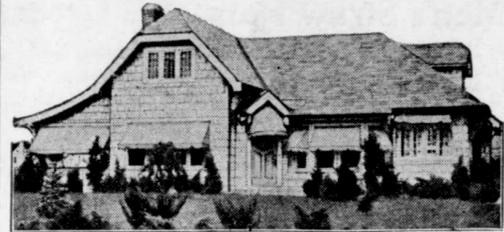

Fish au Gratin.—Melt four tablespoonfuls of butter in a saucepan, stir into it three tablespoonfuls of flour blended with one-half teaspoonful of salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper. Add gradually one cupful of milk and one cupful of stock; this may be made from fish bones and scraps. Stir until smooth and creamy then add well beaten egg yolks. Mix with two pounds of cooked fish, flaked, put into a baking dish or individual dishes, cover with sprinkled cheese and then with buttered crumbs. Place in the broiling oven to brown.

Fish Chowder.—This may be prepared of fresh fish, or salt, such as codfish. Soak the fish to soften and parboil, then shred. Take one-fourth pound of salt pork cut into small dice and brown, trying out all the fat. When the pork is brown add a quart of water, three sliced onions and six sliced potatoes; cook until the vegetables are nearly tender before adding the salt fish; if uncooked fish is used add earlier to the mixture. Season well with salt and pepper and add one quart of hot milk, with three or four milk crackers soaked in hot milk. The amount of fish may vary as to taste.

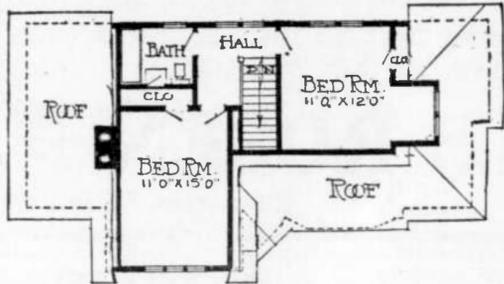

When using oil or gas stoves during the summer, to keep food and dishes for serving, hot, place them in a dripping pan with hot water. Several dishes may be heated at once in this way.

Charming Rambling Effect Achieved in Really Compact House Design

First Floor Plan.

Second Floor Plan.

By W. A. RADFORD
Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

A low rambling effect, yet one which holds together remarkably well, is the basis of appeal in this most attractive home. It is particularly well adapted to a location where somewhat irregular ground affords a site upon an elevation. The low, irregular roof and wide eaves, with the roof line sweeping down over the porch makes the house cling to the ground, and gives it a snug appearance. The snubbed gables add to this, while the wide shingles of the exterior, the large brick chimney and small-paned windows add their touch to the whole effect.

Turning to the plans we find a dwelling of five rooms and breakfast room. Just the right size for the average family, and every room commodious in size. The entrance, in the angle of the "L," opens into a small hallway from which stairs lead up to

Artistic Touch Given Home by Colored Putty

Steel casement windows of the double-weathering type, which are well suited to any type of American domestic architecture, offer another means whereby the enlivening effect of color can be added to the house exterior.

This is because they are made for outside glazing; and the new colored putty, in contrasting colors to the painted frames, emphasize the small lights of the casements in interesting fashion.

Outside glazing also forms a natural ledge on the outside of the window for turning water and preventing leakage. Special spring wire clips, which come with the windows, make the installation secure and eliminate the possibility of glass falling out due to dried putty. A neat inside finish is also gained by placing the putty outside.

In glazing the steel casement sash the glass is usually bedded in putty placed before the glass, after which more putty is placed around and against the glass. Special steel sash putty is available everywhere and may be obtained in any suitable color.

Cedar Panels Give Very Pleasing Effect

An interesting method of obtaining an all-wood half-timbered effect has been developed on the west coast by the use of western red cedar panels. Builders have utilized cedar finish lumber from one-half to one inch thick in place of the usual stucco, mortar, or brick between the timbers.

Since cedar is easy to work, these panels are readily fitted into place between the heavy timbers used to get the half-timbered effect on the exterior. Being of dry lumber, there is no danger of cracking, warping or pulling away at corners. Only vertical grain-clear cedar is used for these panels. The great size of the western red cedar trees makes it possible to get lengths and widths of clear cedar to fit any architectural plan.

The same half-timbered effect may be gained in a less expensive type of construction by omitting the heavy timbers and applying the cedar panels directly on the sheathing. Cedar strips can then be used to cover the joints of the upper floor. On this upper floor are the sleeping quarters, two bedrooms equipped with ample closets and the bathroom. Though this is but a story and a half house, each of the bedrooms is so arranged that cross ventilation can be obtained by way of the hall windows, and with proper exposure they should be always comfortable.

On the lower floor, we find at one side of the entrance hall, a large living room, 13 by 23 feet with a broad fireplace at one side with French doors opening from it onto the porch. This is just such a combination of living room and porch, as we always associate with the idea of home as distinguished from the modern cramped apartment and with the privacy at the side of the house, separated from the entrance, the porch will be a welcome gathering place on warm evenings.

At the opposite side of the hall is the dining room, with the breakfast room, just off it serving as a passage from the kitchen and affording the much desired separation of kitchen and dining room which must so often be sacrificed in the small modern house. From the kitchen two steps lead down to the service entrance, and from the latter one passes to the basement stairs.

of home heating furnace is available all over the country at prices no higher than those charged for the usual type.

The new unit is made for both steam and hot water heating installations and is distinguished by its insulated metal jacket, finished in a glossy enamel, which adds to its attractiveness as an integral piece of furnishing for the basement.

The perfected sectional design of the new boiler insures quick heating response on cold winter mornings and an unusually high degree of fuel economy. Both water and steam boilers are fully equipped with automatic regulation and all accessories.

The insulation is thorough, insuring a minimum of heat loss through the walls, and its metal covering makes it practically indestructible, besides enhancing the appearance of the unit. The doors are finished in black porcelain enamel, forming an effective contrast with the vivid red of the jacket.

The joints at which dust might otherwise penetrate to the basement, and so to the rest of the house, are machined and ground to a tight fit, this feature also being a point in fuel economy.

The grates are of a type designed to retain the coal until every combustible particle has been consumed, and then to permit of ready shaking without the annoyance of jamming. Fire passages are so arranged that but a small proportion of heat is lost in the chimney.

and act as false timbers. These may be one by six inches and when carefully applied over the panels give an excellent result. This type of paneling and timbering is especially effective on gable ends or entrance.

The smooth surface of the cedar finish lumber affords an ideal surface for either stain or paint. The panels are usually of light shades, to contrast with the darker colors used on the half-timbering. For rough effects the panels can be used unsurfaced, giving an excellent broken surface, but yet one which will hold paint or stain.

Insulation in Home Keeps Out Dampness

The constantly changing temperature of all seasons will work no hardship on you or your family if you live in a well-insulated home. When the driving rain comes your home will be free from dampness and the annoyance and expense of moisture-stained walls. Insulating lumber in walls and roofs makes the home uniformly comfortable from the ground floor to the attic in all seasons of the year.

Efficiency Pays on Farm Factory

Records of 47 in Franklin County, Ohio, Show Profits by Planning.

Efficiency in operating a farm pays dividends just as surely as it does in manufacturing automobiles. Records of 47 Franklin county farms for the season of 1927, proved it. The operators of the farms kept the records themselves, assisted by Ira S. Hoddinott, county agent. At the end of the year the accounts were summarized by the rural economics department of the Ohio State university.

High Labor Incomes.
The ten operators with the highest ten labor incomes were ahead an average of $2,655 each for the year's work. The men with the lowest income, averaged $242 each, less than a tenth as much.

Several factors entered into the difference. Prominent among them was the efficiency of labor on the farm. The men in the high income group had farms averaging 130 acres as against 124 acres for the other group, or 109.7 per cent as much. And the man-labor used was also 109 per cent greater. But more of the land was put to work on the farms which returned the high incomes. Of the high group, an average of 66.2 per cent of the acreage was in crops, as against only 55.6 per cent of the average in the low group. So that the men on the high income farms tended 130 per cent more crop land than the men on the low income farms.

Crop acres handled by each man in the high income group averaged 58, and in the low income group, only 49.

Shows Greater Efficiency.
Work on the farms which returned the high incomes was so planned that even the horses showed greater efficiency. On the high income farms there was one horse to every 28 acres. On the lower group, it took a horse to every 18 acres. The men on the more profitable farms handled 118 per cent as much crop land as the men in the other group; the horses in the upper group handled 123 per cent as much as their competitors.

Barnyard Manure Often Is Carelessly Handled

Barnyard manure is often carelessly handled in this country. Not infrequently from 30 to 50 per cent of its value is allowed to go to waste through leaching and fermentation when much of this loss could be prevented by more prompt hauling. The value to the farmer of barnyard manure depends to a large extent upon the soil to which it is applied.

At the experiment station in Illinois, the value of manure in crop returns varied from 53 cents to $7.45 a ton, depending upon the fertility of the soil. The average obtained from 10 fields of what might be called average corn belt soil, when manure was applied once in a four-year rotation at the rate of nearly 10 tons per acre, was $2.68 per ton. This value was based upon the increase in crop returns due to the manure. Similar tests made elsewhere would indicate that the value of barnyard manure may safely be placed at $2 to $2.50 a ton. It is worth taking good care of this by-product.

Drying of Hay and Grain by the Use of Hot Air

The artificial drying of hay and grain by the use of hot air will remove a large portion of the weather hazard feared by producers of these crops, according to Prof. W. C. Aitkenhead of Purdue university.

A tractor-driven blower, forcing air, heated by an oil burning furnace, into a hollow centered stack of hay, or grain in the sheaf, will drive out the moisture sufficiently for storage or threshing in from five to ten hours, depending upon the size of the stack and the amount of moisture in the material. All heat generated by the oil burner is forced through the stack as all the gases of combustion are carried into the stack. A spark arrester located between the furnace and the blower makes this possible.

Corn in a crib can also be dried with this equipment if a passage for the air is provided through the crib.

Agricultural Hints

Do not cut the alfalfa unless the weeds are too numerous.

Be sure to spray your potatoes this summer. The practice is no longer experimental.

Millet and sudan grass may make a good amount of hay, but it is not well adapted for dairy feed because of the low protein content.

When clover or alfalfa follow small grains, increased yields result if a fertilizer mixture, especially one containing some potash, is sown with the grain.

To prevent the cabbage butterfly from depositing eggs upon the cabbage, use of fine air-slaked lime, road dust, wood ashes, or powdered tobacco leaves.

To poison the cabbage worm and flea beetles, mix paris green with lime or ashes at the rate of one tablespoonful of paris green to one pint of lime or ashes.

A husker shredder increases the efficiency of man labor in husking corn from the shock by 123 per cent, according to a study made by Ohio university economists.

All varieties of biennial sweet clover seem essentially equal for soil improvement. The yellow makes less hay the first fall, and less hay the second year, but contrary to the usual opinion, its root growth is fully equal to the white.

It May Be Urgent

When your Children Cry for It

Castoria is a comfort when Baby is fretful. No sooner taken than the little one is at ease. If restless, a few drops soon bring contentment. No harm done, for Castoria is a baby remedy, meant for babies. Perfectly safe to give the youngest infant; you have the doctors' word for that! It is a vegetable product and you could use it every day. But it's in an emergency that Castoria means most. Some night when constipation must be relieved—or colic pains—or other suffering. Never be without it. Some mothers keep an extra bottle, unopened, to make sure there will always be Castoria in the house. It is effective for older children, too; read the book that comes with it.

Man Chased by Eagle

While taking home peats near Levenburgh, Scotland, recently, John Kerr was chased by an eagle. When the large bird began to hover above him, as if ready to strike, Kerr shouted at the top of his voice to frighten it, but the eagle came nearer and continued to follow him for a considerable distance. Kerr took refuge behind a peat stack and watched the bird's efforts to locate him. It failed to do so, and finally soared high and disappeared. As it is the first eagle seen in that part of the country for 40 years, residents are watching for it with the hopes of bagging it as a souvenir.

Woman Figure Wizard

Scientists of Europe are interested in the case of a woman in a Welsh hospital who can neither read nor write, but is a genius at mental arithmetic. She can solve mathematical problems in 30 seconds, and is said to never give an incorrect answer. She also has a remarkable memory and can recall a large number of historical dates at will.

Prominence

"You have succeeded in attracting some attention in the country."
"Yes," answered the professor. "I have sought fame. And I may at least claim that there is not a financial 'sucker list' in the country that does not include my name."

Green Apples, Perhaps

Three-year-old Jimmie was suffering with a pain in his midsection. His complaining finally received attention and he was asked what was the matter.

"I think," said Jimmie. "I ate something that didn't concern me."

Stupid

"Let us go to the circus—they say one of the monkeys is so intelligent that he does the work of three men."

"Then he can hardly be intelligent."

STUDEBAKER'S Ball Bearing Spring "Shackles"

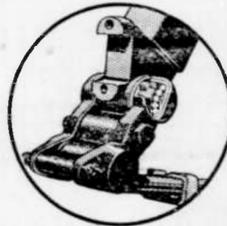

In these new cars a patented invention at last solves a problem that has long baffled automotive engineers.

Every motorist knows the importance of spring shackles—those joints or hinges which form the connecting link between body and axles. Engineers have sought to reduce friction to a minimum at these vital joints—to make them flexible yet firm and uniform in action—to make them noiseless—to reduce the necessity for frequent lubrication. All these objectives have now been attained in Studebaker cars.

So revolutionary is this sensational innovation that the word "shackles," with its implication of restricted movement, is no longer applicable. The incessant action and reaction between body and axles is now carried by 172 steel balls rolling in lubricant—no binding, no squeaks, no rattles, no sideway. Instead, smooth, silent resiliency, an undeviating uniformity of action and an enduring buoyancy that will keep your Studebaker young.

In place of complicated centralized systems for oiling and greasing, each ball bearing spring "shackle" contains, sealed within it, ample lubricant to last for more than twenty thousand miles.

At last... ball bearing spring shackles... the secret of the remarkable riding comfort of the new Studebakers.

Come ride in a new Studebaker today. Thrill to its champion performance. See rare new beauty of line and color. Then compare Studebaker's new low One-Price prices—the triumph of 76 years' manufacturing experience!

RUPTURE SHIELD EXPERT HERE

E. J. Meinhardi, of Chicago, the well known expert, will personally be at the Retlaw Hotel, Fond du Lac, Wis., on Thursday only, August 2nd. Mr. Meinhardi says: retain the Rupture perfectly, but contracts the opening in 10 days on the average case—usually giving instantaneous relief withstanding all strain regardless of the size or location of the Rupture.

CAUTION—Do not expose yourself to the danger of wearing old-style trusses with understraps. These trusses usually place the pad on the lump and not on the rupture opening. This often causes strangulation which usually necessitates an immediate surgical operation or results in sudden death.

"The Meinhardi Vacuum Shield" has no understraps. It is also perfectly sanitary and practically indestructible and can be worn while bathing.

Ruptures often cause Stomach Trouble, Backache, Constipation, Nervousness and other ailments which promptly disappear after the Rupture is properly retained.

Only gentlemen are invited to call at this time as special arrangements will be announced later for women and children.

Striking Pay Dirt.

Striking pay dirt in the business of dairying means eliminating waste and marketing a quality product. One proven way of eliminating waste is by testing the cows of your herd, and weeding out the ones that fail to turn out enough milk fat to show you a profit. An important feature is the care that is given the milk, from the moment it leaves the udder of the cow, until it is delivered at the plant, as the quality of the product we market has an important bearing on the consumption of our product. Market nice sweet milk, from a herd of tested cows, should prove to be an interesting business, and profitable.
