

My Greatest Thrill in Sport

An Interview With
CLARK GRIFFITH
President of the Washington Baseball Team

Clark Griffith.

WITH a career in baseball extending over a period of more than thirty years, it is no easy matter to determine what situation furnished the biggest kick for him, according to Clark Griffith.

But the boss of the Washington Americans can recall none that proved as potent in stirring his emotions as the feat of Walter Johnson in fanning Long George Kelly in the seventh and final world series game, in which the Griffins established their superiority over the New York Giants.

Having been a pitcher himself, and a cracking good one, too, it might be supposed that some close play or tense situation occurring during the many years he was in active service, and which concerned him personally, would be most indelibly engraved on his mind, but such is not the case.

"Last season proved just one succession of thrills for me," said the veteran diamond strategist. "There were any number of big moments during the campaign, such as the whipping of Babe Ruth by Allen Russell in that series at New York when our club wrested the league leadership from the Yankees.

"The post-season set with the Giants was chock full of exciting situations, too, notably the hit Harris made in the sixth game that scored two runs and enabled us to grab that contest. It is true that without Bucky's bingle then, the opportunity for Johnson to stage his big scene the next day never would have been presented, for a victory for the Giants would have ended the series in their favor.

"But, so far as I am concerned, it was Walter who provided me with the biggest punch I ever have experienced.

"It will be remembered that Johnson twice struck out Kelly after having purposely passed Young in that seventh game, the second time in the eleventh inning, with runners on second and first. But it was the first time he accomplished the feat that stands out most vividly in my memory.

"The dramatic circumstances attending the feat were a factor, I suppose. The score was a tie at 3-all, due to the fact that Harris in the eighth inning again had come through with a hit that scored two runs, when Johnson, who previously had suffered two defeats, entered the box to oppose the Giants in the ninth inning.

"Manager Harris was staking his all on the big fellow, and if he failed again Washington's cause would be lost.

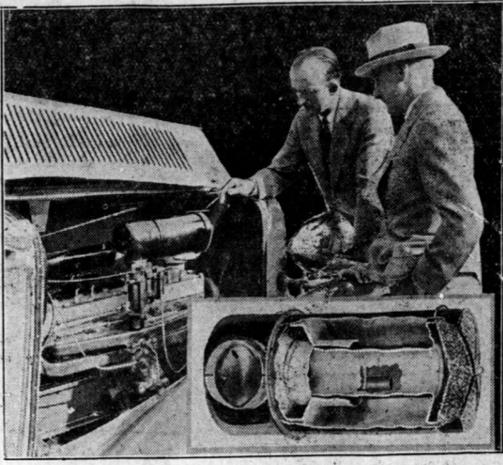

"Walter easily disposed of Lindstrom, the first batter up, but was nicked for a triple by Frisch. With Young, a left-handed hitter of great ability up, Harris wisely decided to purposely pass him and take a change with Kelly, who hits the same way Johnson pitches—right-handed.

"To me it seemed that the outcome of that game—and it meant the series—hinged on the result of that duel between pitcher and batsman. And when Johnson succeeded in making Kelly swing futilely at a third strike I knew that Washington would win the highest honor in the sport and that no other moment could give me a bigger kick.

"It turned out that my confidence was justified, for we copped in the twelfth inning. But even the hit that produced the decisive counter didn't give me the thrill I felt when Walter slipped over that third strike."

CARBURETOR INTAKE SILENCER IS NEW

Joseph Zubaty, engineer, and Harlow H. Curtice, automobile executive, inspecting the latest automobile device, the carburetor intake silencer. The inset gives a cut-away view of the silencer.

Arrange Car for Rigors of Hard Winter Work

With winter here the motorist should check over his car or have his service station do so in order that it will be in proper condition to withstand the rigors of winter driving.

The following recommendations on putting the car in shape for winter are gleaned from Sumner S. Howard, an authority on automobile service.

The first step in the procedure is to clean the chassis, engine and body, as dirt can hide many defects.

Tighten all bolts and nuts. Check front wheels for proper alignment; remove hub caps and re-grease; adjust wheel bearings and replace hub caps.

Check steering gear for proper adjustment. Drain the old oil from the transmission and differential and pour into both about a quart of kerosene. At the same time put in the radiator a few handfuls of sal soda and then drive the car two or three miles. The kerosene should then be drained from the transmission and differential and water drained from the radiator. A winter grade lubricant recommended by the car manufacturer should then be put in the transmission and differential.

Inspect the rubber hose connections, replacing if necessary, after which the radiator should be filled with clean water; and at the first appearance of cold weather an anti-freeze solution should be added.

Next, drain oil from the engine; flush crankcase and put in a winter grade of oil. If the oil filter has been in use for 10,000 miles install a new cartridge.

Inspect wiring and clean contacts; oil generator and starting motor and clean the armatures and brushes; set generator charging rate ahead for winter driving; check breaker points for proper spacing; replace spark plugs if used more than 10,000 miles; if used less than this, clean them and adjust the gaps; clean battery with ammonia water solution; tighten terminals and grease with vaseline; inspect water level and if gravity reading is low, recharge.

Oil and grease all parts that require it. Adjust brakes and reline if necessary.

The motorist should also examine the top of his car. Going over the top with a good grade of top dressing will do much to preserve it and help appearances.

Many car manufacturers are now equipping cars with a summer and winter driving adjustment on the carburetor and the proper adjustment to the carburetor should be made at this time. The fuel and carburetor strainers should also be taken out and cleaned.

With these simple but highly essential adjustments, a winter of carefree driving should be enjoyed.

POULTRY

DETAILS INSURE EGGS IN WINTER

Pullets Must Be Given Well-Balanced Ration.

If the pullets are to produce an abundance of winter eggs, they must have a well-balanced ration, plenty of room, fresh air, and clean litter and be free from lice and other annoyances. Their development and management during the critical time just preceding and during the winter laying period requires careful attention to many details.

After the range has become depleted, cabbage, Swiss chard, or other green feed should be added to the ration and continued throughout the winter months. Green feeds aid in egg production and help to prevent diseases, especially colds and roup. Skim-milk or buttermilk in the ration is also an aid in producing winter eggs and maintaining the health of the flock. Sudden changes in feed are to be avoided.

The house should be clean, well ventilated and roomy. Leghorns require at least three square feet of floor space and six inches of roosting space. The heavy breeds need more space.

Pullets need a great deal of fresh air. The house should have 15 to 25 square feet of open space in front for each hundred pullets. This space is kept wide open except in very windy or severely cold weather when it may be partly closed by lath wind bafflers.

The skillful poultryman will move the pullets, into winter quarters before they begin to lay and will keep them perfectly free from lice and mites and other sources of annoyance.

Fattening of Poultry for Holiday Markets

The chickens that are fat will be the ones that will bring the highest price on the market during the holiday trade. Always the fat ones are bought before the poor ones. So warns D. H. Hall, extension poultry husbandman, Clemson college, in discussing the fattening of poultry for market.

The fattening ration of birds is very simple, says Mr. Hall. You have enough protein to build up muscle, but the carbohydrates content should be high. A soft feed or mash should be fed in order to make the muscles as soft as possible. The following ration will make a good fattening food: 50 pounds corn meal, 25 pounds wheat bran, 25 pounds middlings.

Mix the above with two parts buttermilk. When buttermilk is not available, meat scrap can be mixed with this ration at the rate of 15 pounds per 100 and water used to moisten the mash.

Young fowls stand confinement well, but old hens do not. It is best to fatten young fowls in coops and old hens in small runs. A fowl on fattening ration should gain from 50 to 90 per cent of its own weight.

Changing Litter Often Gives Healthy Results

Nature has decreed that no animal does well for any length of time close together with its own excrement. Do not forget this. Do not force your birds to pick over and try to eat out of litter which is largely composed of dust and dried hen manure.

Change the litter frequently. It is a labor, a trouble, and an expense; yes, but it is the only way to do, if you want the best results with your poultry.

Whether the floors of your house are of boards or cement, do not let them become damp. Remember, a hen's kidneys throw off a comparatively small amount of matter, and the poor hen has no sweat glands, so that most of the liquid (and she drinks a lot of water, you know) is thrown off in her breath.

The air in a henhouse is bound to be damp enough any way, and it is the practice of a good poultryman to so arrange his floors and ventilation that dampness is kept to an absolute minimum.

Ultra Violet Rays

Windows should be hinged so that the sun can shine directly onto the hens, because the sunlight coming through glass loses the ultra violet rays. These rays have the property to make the minerals in the ration available. A hen apparently has the ability to store this factor in her body, but if she lays well and is kept out of direct sunlight for a long time, then she exhausts the supply. She may continue to lay but will make only this shelled eggs.

Potatoes for Hens

Cooked potatoes make a valuable addition to the ration for winter layers. Raw potatoes are not satisfactory for chickens. For best results they must be boiled or steamed so as to be mashed and mixed while hot with that amount of the laying mash that will make a moist, crumbly mixture. The mixture is fed as a warm mash at noon or in the evening in the amount that the hens will readily consume in about 15 or 20 minutes' time.

Mature the Pullets

Small and thin pullets never make good winter layers and farmers who want to have eggs to sell when eggs are high in price should keep only mature pullets for winter layers, according to J. B. Hayes of the University of Wisconsin. It is almost impossible to have pullets too fat at the start of the laying season, and if they are not in good heavy condition the young birds cannot stand up under the severe strain of heavy production, he points out.

Gasoline Consumption Shows Much Greater Yearly Increase

One of the most encouraging factors in the present situation—as seen by the automobile builder—is the continued climb of gasoline consumption. Figures attest the growing importance of the automobile in social and business life.

The most recent official statistics on gas consumption, as drawn from tax returns in 45 states, reveal 4,019,000,000 gallons used in the first five months of this year, or a 10.5 per cent increase over the same period of 1929. This gain is far in excess of motor registration increase.

With California, New York and Illinois not tabulated, Montana scores the greatest gain over 1929 with 29.5 per cent. Idaho had a 28 per cent increase, Iowa 27. Other states that registered above 20 per cent were Wisconsin, New Mexico, Rhode Island, South Carolina and New Hampshire.

Why Spark Plugs Must Be Changed

Old or worn out spark plugs cause poor starting and excessive drain on the battery, poor running, fuel waste, and loss of power, especially on hills. Often large engine repair expense is saved by simply installing a new set of spark plugs, which is recommended every 10,000 miles.

Tests show that a motor in which spark plugs had been used for a little more than 11,000 miles developed 31.2 horse power, when run at an engine speed equivalent to 20 miles an hour. The same motor run at the same speed equipped with a new set of plugs gave a horse power reading of 38.0, an increase of 6.8 horse power.

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing better for every-day use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is genuine

We Have Changed All That

By Herbert Quick and Elena Stepanoff Mac Mahon

Herbert Quick's visit to Vladivostok in 1920 on behalf of the Red Cross and his meeting with Elena Stepanoff led to this story. It came as an interlude in the composition of his epic of the Iowa soil—the three famous novels, "Vandemarck's Folly," "The Hawk-eye" and "The Invisible Woman," and the personal record of his early years, "One Man's Life." He desired to have its publication deferred till the last mentioned work—his autobiography—was finished. Then came his untimely death.

CHAPTER I
Kazan and the House of Krassin

The man wore a peasant's smock; but he was very terrible to the great lady who was showing him over her house. But that group of men who followed him—they were more terrible still. Yet, she could not conceal from him the feeling of contempt that she felt for him and for them as she opened one room after another for their inspection.

"That is one of the rooms," said she with that little half-contemptuous smile, as if at his ignorance of great houses, "into which we looked at first. Across here are the last rooms on this side. Enter, please!"

The man in the peasant's smock, followed by that terrible squad of armed men, felt the sting of her contempt. For he had been in great houses before. This peasant's smock—he wished that he could somehow make her understand that he had never worn it until liberty came to Russia in the dictatorship of the proletariat. He was confused and exasperated. Just as she had hoped he would be. So he turned from the door through which she had said they had been before—just as, with held breath, she had hoped he would do; and he entered the room across the hall when the strong, plain, distinguished old lady of the palace swung the door open for him.

The squad paused outside. The man in the peasant's smock entered—entered the luxurious boudoir of a lady! He strode across to the other end of the room, and threw aside a beautiful Persian hanging. He pressed rudely through into a bedroom. As he entered, a young girl rose from a chaise-longue on which she had been reclining, and stood before him in filmy negligee, her eyes wide with astonishment.

"Mother," gasped the girl, "what is the meaning of this?"
"It is an officer of the government," said the old lady, still breathing quickly, but more easily, as does the hen-pheasant when the search has passed her nest; "he is looking at the house. They thought we might have unoccupied rooms. I have explained to this gentleman—"
"No gentleman!" he shouted with needless emphasis. "I am Tovarish Vinsky of the local government of the dictatorship of the proletariat! We are considering whether you fine ladies will not go out into the street and leave these rooms to the officers of the government!"
"Musia," said the old woman, "you may retire, my daughter, while we are busy here."
"Nothing doing!" said Vinsky. "I don't feel so much in a hurry as I did before I came in here. This room," said he to his clerk, "will remain just as it is. I like the furniture. I like everything in it. Come, my dear, play us some music. I feel like enjoying myself today!"
Does the reader comprehend the situation?

Scarcely, unless he or she was in Kazan in those times—or at least, in Russia. Perhaps we may make it easier to understand.

To the eyes of travelers pressing eastward that day from Moscow or Petrograd, either by railway or by boat on the Volga, the ancient city of Kazan lay sprawled abroad shimmering in the hot sun of midsummer.

It is, if one may guess that anything but chaos and famine in the Volga basin still "is," the center of Mohammedan culture in eastern Russia, and of Christian culture, too, for it is the site of the great cathedral of the Annunciation.

In it still stands, one may suppose, the old Bogoroditsky convent in which the miracle-working Black Virgin of Kazan once had her home, before she was ravished away by higher powers which cared for religious relics, first, centuries ago to Moscow, and then to St. Petersburg—where, it appears, her miracles have been less frequent than they were formerly.

With her oriental eye Kazan looked away across the Admiralty suburb, where Peter the Great built his river fleet for his campaigns against Persia, down her pretty little river the Kazanka, to where the Volga, the Russian Mississippi, flowed, almost dry on this day in comparison with the floods that sometimes roll into the purlieus of Kazan; looked on across the Volga, over mysterious distances to mysterious eastern places, to Perm; to Ufa, down to Saratov, and on to Astrakhan.

But Kazan had an eye of the occident, too. With this she contemplated her railway line from Moscow, her factories of soap—of which her population just now seemed much in need; her other factories of leather goods, military boots, munitions of war; and to go with the munitions—of sacred images and candles; of cotton cloth, woelens and bells.

There were many travelers who sought for a first glance of it, and thought it only a little dirtier than of yore. They were of all sorts; but those who thought of the dirt are worth noting. They talked among themselves of the house of Krassin, where at this moment Tovarish Vinsky is asking Musia Krassin to play for him.

Such travelers wore all sorts of clothes, and a few were in uniform. All their clothes were of had once been of good quality. Some of these men had never seen Kazan, or had seen her rarely; but they were crowding into the city because most of them were, under the laws of the old empire, legal residents of the town, because their ancestors had been registered there. They were of the caste of the plain, proud old woman who had fluttered away from her secret with Tovarish Vinsky down there in the Krassin house—a part of the history of Great Russia with authority, great estates, immense power and wealth, and back a few decades, with the serf and the knout in their systems.

They were going down to Kazan for another sitting of the great Court of Fate in which went on the trial of their souls; a court in which were also on trial the souls of Tovarish Vinsky, of the squad of armed men with him, and the soul of Mrs. Krassin with her secret room, and her blond-haired daughter, Musia. Russia was a great wine-press in which the grapes were being crushed—and the grapes were the souls of men and women.

Gigantic Strides Made in Use of Esperanto
Esperanto was created by Dr. L. L. Zamenhof (1859-1917), who was born at Bialystok, Russia. He believed that much international misunderstanding might be removed if a common language were available, and he conceived the idea of Esperanto. By the age of nineteen, he had completed the construction of his new language, but it was then subjected to scrutiny and practical tests till 1887, when he published his "Lingvo Internacia" under the pseudonym of "Doctor Esperanto." Since that time the use of Esperanto has spread rapidly, and Esperanto associations have been formed in every country. Even in the British Isles, where the importance of the movement does not appear to have been fully understood, there are supposed to be 100,000 persons with a knowledge of the language. The third universal Esperanto congress was held at Cambridge in 1907, and since then more than 1,250,000 textbooks have been sold in these islands. More than 1,200 delegates, representing every country in the world, attended the twenty-second universal Esperanto congress at Oxford. Among them were a number of Icelanders.

DEER SEASON OPENS DEC. 1

Deer hunters have their calendar marked at Dec. 1-10, for this is the even numbered year when the first ten days of December are established as the open season in Wisconsin. Each licensed hunter is permitted to kill one male deer of not less than a year of age. Trapping or hunting deer in any manner other than with a gun held at the shoulder is prohibited. Night hunting is against the law, activities being confined to one hour before sunrise and one hour after sunset. Deer may not be hunted when found in water, as swimming a stream or lured by salt, or from an elevated scaffold. It is unlawful to hunt deer

Walter Huston in
"THE BAD MAN"

Blending comedy and drama, "The Bad Man" is a story of the incidents in the life of a desert Robin Hood that takes place on a ranch near the Mexican border. He is a legendary happy-go-lucky hero who is a ruthless killer and chud at the same time. He is the type that gives his life with a smile in the name of friendship. It's the story of a famous story with an unequalled cast that includes Walter Huston, Dorothy Revier, O. P. Heggie, Sidney Blackmer and James Kenzie

WINTER FEEDING OF GAME NEEDED

Death from starvation is the prospect of many game birds and probably some game animals in Wisconsin this year if sportsmen fail to make emergency feedings, the state conservation commission announced this week.

Summer drought and fall frost combined to kill most vegetation, necessitating emergency feedings, the commission said.

"Too much emphasis can not be placed on the fact that the usual crop of wild fruits, berries, nuts and seeds were practically a failure on tighter soils in certain parts of the state this year," the commission explained. "The second crop of weeds, clover, alfalfa and other vegetation is short and there will be a decrease in the number of clover and weed seeds for birds."

"A heavy frost in some low areas in central Wisconsin ruined much of the buckwheat crop and seriously damaged the food-bearing shrub crops on which game birds subsist, the commission said. The commission urged that sportsmen duplicate their efforts of the last two years to provide food for game birds.

The commission suggested placing shocked corn in fields and wiring shocks of buckwheat or other grains to trees and posts to avoid their being covered by snow.

"If Wisconsin should suffer from a severe winter, with heavy snows and protracted cold weather, game birds and even animals will face the most crucial season in many years," the commission said.

ALIVE WITH IDEAS

His Mistake
"It was the old misunderstanding about the last word," said Mr. Meekton, sadly.
"But I thought you always let your wife have the last word?"
"Of course. But on this occasion I was so careless as to go to sleep before she got to it."—Washington Star.

Utter Cynicism
"So you believe that every man has his price?"
"Not exactly that," answered Senator Sorghum. "But I am strongly inclined to think that many a man has gotten a reputation for great honesty when he was merely holding out for better terms."—Washington Star.

The Exchange
"No, we don't shade our prices to anyone," explained the salesman for the new bantam car. "But have you anything you would like to trade in?"
Customer (doubtfully)—Well, I've got a baby carriage and my son's kiddy car.

BERET TO MATCH SUIT FAVORED; "WEIGHTLESS" WOOLENS APPEAL

THE idea of the beret made of the cloth of the dress, blouse, suit or ensemble which it tops has completely captured the fancy of fashion's followers. During the daytime hours, about town at the smart restaurants, in fact most everywhere that one sees a chic tailor made of some one or other of the new smart novelty woolen weaves, it is almost sure to be accompanied with a jaunty close-fitting headpiece which has been composed of the very selfsame material.

we in our day are privileged to behold. So sheer, so colorful, so unusual, so everything to be desired for smart frocks such as can go most anywhere and be admired for their chic. No wise-to-style woman can afford to pass them lightly by.

When is the proper time of the day to wear the frock made of some one or other of the new lightweight woolen weaves? Echo answers, morning, noon or afternoon, in fact any time between dawn and when the lights are on, and being so exquisitely dainty, some of the very sheer light woolens lywood, the "Paris of America," which accounts for the fact that Margaret Adams, recently arrived from Broadway, chose to be garbed in a fetching suit-plus-beret costume when she posed for her picture which is herewith reproduced. The entire outfit is in gray, from tip to toe. As a matter of information we might say that gray is a color gaining steadily in favor. True, as yet, it is being worn by a select few only. However an increasing demand is reported for gray novelty woolens and also gray furs.

even find themselves bobbing with satins and silks, chiffons and velvets at dinner parties and the dance. The models pictured below are of a near weightless woolens as weaves can be. They are just such as the well dressed woman will love to wear during her round of rather informal daytime events. The genteel-looking frock to the right is of chiffon vilma worsted in black and white. An interesting item about this dress is that it actually weighs little more than a pound.

One notes this trend to gray mixtures in the newer stripes, checks and plaids now so popular for sports and about-town suits. Especially is gray allied with black and white. "They say" that even the new silk prints for spring show a predilection for gray tones—but we look too far into the future. As to the immediate moment, choose rough mannish woolen, trim it in long-haired gray fur or smooth caracul and chic is the word.

For the novel Paris gown to the left in this illustration Suzanne Talbot uses sheer pink woolen. Tiers of scalloped box-pleating form a most attractive skirt, the scallops being repeated on the deep oval collar and on the cuffs, which finish the modish elbow sleeves. The patent leather belt and the long suede gloves give, the contrasting note of black which the French designer seldom omits. The small chenille hat in black and pink is a charming exponent of the latest, or shall we say the earliest, in winter millinery.

It has grown to be quite the smart thing to wear a dress of colorful and designful (meaning striking plaids or checks or stripes) weaves, topping the same with a short fur jacket or one of plain-colored flannel, the beret being made either of the novelty woolen to match the frock or of the fur or flannel to match the modish belted-in jacket.

The would-be inventor, says the article, had seen an invention to work, which he had to see others toiling, and wash day brought him particularly keen pangs. Mr. Ralsin took a discarded butter churn, filled it with water, soap and several pairs of overalls and induced a colored man named Benjamin to operate it.

Light Woolens in Favor.
Hear, hear, hear! All women interested in what's smartest for daytime frocks. 'Tis the new perfectly charming weightless woolen weaves to which fashion would call your attention.

Surely this is a season of triumph for fine fabrics woven of fine woolen. Never such were known in days of yore as the fairylike woolens which be drawn through a ring. It is possible to secure these diaphanous wool textures in lovely light tones especially in pale blue which is a favorite color this year for gowns of more or less formal character. However the most insistent call is for black or dark rich tones.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT
The bride of today with all her equipment in culinary knowledge has no fear of failures in cookery. Up-to-date cook books with clear directions for preparing even the simple foods gives assurance to the most inexperienced.

Here is one which any bride will like to try:
Fancy Biscuit.—Take two cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of shortening, one egg and two-thirds of a cupful of milk, one-third cupful of sliced dates, four tablespoonfuls of peanut butter and one egg yolk. Sift the dry ingredients, work in the shortening with a fork until well blended, add milk and well beaten egg to form a soft dough. Roll out on a floured board and cut small rounds. Spread one with peanut butter, place one or two slices of dates and cover with another round. Press the edges together to enclose the butter and dates. Brush with egg diluted with a little milk or water and bake in a hot oven. If preferred cut the rounds larger and put the butter and date on one-half and fold over, pinching the edges together.

Mocha Frosting.—Take one-fourth cupful of butter, one tablespoonful of cocoa, two cupfuls of confectioner's sugar and three to four tablespoonfuls of strong coffee infusion. Cream the butter, add the cocoa. Stir in the sugar and coffee gradually. Beat until smooth and spread on the cake.
Coffee Ice Cream.—Scald one and one-half cupfuls of milk with one-third of a cupful of finely ground coffee, strain through a double cheese cloth, add one cupful of sugar, the beaten yolks of four eggs, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt; cook over water until thick, adding one-fourth cupful of sugar and one cupful of cream; cool, add three more cupfuls of cream and freeze. Serve garnished with maraschino cherries.

First Washing Machine Got Inventor "In Bad"
Therill E. Ralsin of Glory, Maryland, who is credited by Country Home with being the first man to experiment with a washing machine, occupies no place in the ranks of men who emancipated women and lightened their burdens. Entirely to the contrary, such was the womanly scorn that Therill aroused in his sister Emily by his interference with the sacred Monday morning wash-day rites, that at the age of sixty he had to leave his home forever under the suspicion of being not quite mentally sound.

The would-be inventor, says the article, had seen an invention to work, which he had to see others toiling, and wash day brought him particularly keen pangs. Mr. Ralsin took a discarded butter churn, filled it with water, soap and several pairs of overalls and induced a colored man named Benjamin to operate it.

Prevalence of Goitre
Goitre prevails more or less in all parts of the world, and among all peoples. It is worst in Switzerland, where almost 100 per cent of the inhabitants are affected. Formerly their affliction was attributed to drinking water from melted snows, but now it is known to be due to lack of iodine. Swiss families that can afford the expense spend some weeks annually at the seashore for a cure.

"Primrose Path"
Shakespeare's "Hamlet," act 1, scene 3, line 50, says, "Doe not as some ungracious pastors doe shew me the steep and thorny way to heaven; Whilst like a puft and reckless path of pleasure, libertine, himselfe the primrose path of dalliance treads."

Moses' Horns
In the Latin version of the Bible made by Jerome in the Fifth century, known as the Vulgate, and translated into what is now called the Douai Bible, it is stated that "Moses' face was horned." The old artists were guided by the Vulgate, and the horns became symbolical of Moses' inspiration as a prophet.

Gave Name to Tree
The magnolia tree was named for Pierre Magnol, a French botanist of the early Seventeenth century.

To be a Healthy Woman watch your Bowels!

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh, laxative-herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients. It doesn't sicken or weaken you. No restrictions of habit or diet are necessary while taking it. But its action is thorough. It carries off the sour bile and poisonous waste. It does everything you want it to do. It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow.

When you've a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all druggists keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

NINETY DISASTERS CALL FOR RED CROSS RELIEF, AT COST OF $1,200,000

Vice Chairman Fieser Cites Readiness to Act of National Society, Which Lessens Loss of Life—3,500 Chapters Aid in Work.

Readiness to act in an emergency, should a disaster strike, has become part of the Red Cross Chapter program in thousands of communities.

As in former years, tornadoes brought the greatest damage. Twenty-four serious tornadoes occurred. Fire also took toll of life and property in twenty-four communities.

The disaster relief work of the Red Cross cost $1,200,151 last year. Statistics showed an approximate death rate of 790 persons in these disasters; buildings destroyed or damaged, 19,878; persons injured, 1,487, and persons assisted by the Red Cross, 96,872.

"This type of work is supported by the memberships of citizens of the United States, their volunteer contributions, and their devoted work," Mr. Fieser said.

Life Savers Numerous. More than a quarter of a million persons are entitled to wear the American Red Cross insignia, denoting they have been taught the expert life saving methods of the organization.

"Join Red Cross," Urges Vice President Curtis

America's prominent citizens join in urging all men and women to become members of the Red Cross during the period of the annual roll call from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving Day.

The Honorable Charles Curtis, Vice President of the United States, says: "The American Red Cross is in a position to and does more to relieve those stricken by misfortune than any other organization in the world. Its splendid work has done much to bring a friendly feeling in all parts of the world for the people of our country because they sustain the American Red Cross."

The Honorable Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, says: "No one can predict when or where disaster may occur or acute emergency arise. The American Red Cross represents our community insurance against such misfortunes. The organization stands ready at all times to render speedy relief to any stricken area in our own country or to assist in the relief of disaster in foreign countries."

Six Foreign Countries Receive Red Cross Aid

Relief was given by the American Red Cross during the year in six foreign nations in disasters ranging from a tidal wave in Newfoundland, an earthquake in Persia, floods in France to help for refugees from Russia and prevention of a smallpox epidemic in Costa Rica.

The $6,000 Red Cross contribution to Newfoundland, following the tidal wave, which took twenty-six lives and destroyed many homes and fishing boats, was the first from an outside country to reach the distressed people.

The sum of $5,000 was given to the fund for the relief of the Menominee refugees of German descent, who had determined to leave Russia for new lands.

When Costa Rica was menaced by a smallpox epidemic, the American Red Cross sent fifty thousand tubes of vaccine, in two airplane loads, undoubtedly saving the country from a serious outbreak of the dread disease.
