WINS TAX SUIT

The ruin of the malting industry by prohibition, with the result that plants all over Wisconsin, which cost thousands of dollars to erect, have been reduced to "junk" was commented on in a decision last week Friday by Judge C. M. Davison by which he wiped out a $20,000 assessment levied by the City of West Bend against the West Bend Malting company.

The case was argued Thursday in West Bend by Attorney Kenneth E. Worthing, who appeared in behalf of the malting company.

The proceeding was before the court on a writ of certiorari in which action of the board of review for the City of West Bend in fixing for a valuation of $20,000 on the plant was passed on. Testimony showed that the plant was erected on property leased from the North Western railroad company, which lease was subject to termination at any time.

Andrew Pick, president of the malting company, testified before the board of review, saying that the plant was worth nowhere near what it had been assessed. Newton Rosenheimer, master of this village, testified that the plant was worth between $10,000 and $12,000 while Merton F. Walters of West Bend estimated it to be worth $5,000.

"There was not a single word of testimony before the board of review, which would justify an assessment of $20,000," said Judge Davison. "The gist of it was that the plant was of no particular value except for junk. Everyone knows that the malting business has been practically ruined."

"Everywhere there are plants just like this one and contractors are loathe to pay anything for old buildings. Lumber, brick and building materials are so cheap that the material salvaged out of old buildings is hardly worth the labor cost in wrecking them."

The decision annuls the assessment against the property and obligates the City of West Bend to re-assess the property in accordance with the findings of the court.

Faith and Works

'Twas an unhappy division that has been made between faith and works. BASEBALL CLUB RE-ORGANIZES

That baseball has the interest of the community was shown last Monday evening when a large number of fans met at Jos. Eberle's place. The meeting was called for the purpose of re-organizing the local baseball club on a more business-like basis. Plans were formulated whereby a drive will be made to sell memberships, fees to be $1.00, both women and men being eligible.

Temporary officers, composed of the present officers, were elected, namely: President, William Endlich; vice-president, John F. Schaefer; secretary, Norbert Becker; treasurer, Arnold Martin. These officers were voted full power to perfect the organization and present a set of by-laws and constitution for adoption at a meeting to be held in the near future, subject to call of the president.

To carry on a successful membership campaign President Endlich appointed a committee consisting of Dr. L. Brauchle, chairman, Erwin Koch, Norbert Becker and Fred E. Witzig. This committee have set for their goal two hundred members. Before the meeting adjourned 25 signed their willingness to become members.

The ball club deserves the hearty support of the entire community. When approached by members of the committee no one should hesitate in helping the cause. The year 1931 the club entertained a very successful year and with plans, as are expected to be carried through for 1932, Kewaskum will be able to boast of a pennant winning team.

The officers will attend a meeting of the Wau-Fon-Du league to be held at Brownsville next Sunday afternoon. The local club was a member of the league during 1931. Several invitations have been extended to the locals to join other leagues but the sentiment is that they should remain in the present organization.

A barrage of leather fired by Bert Elliott and Andrews, kept the local city basketball team winning streak unstained last Sunday evening, as they conquered the strong Oshkosh Teachers by a score of 42 to 25.

Heberer of the locals played a wonderful game at forward. Andrews, the new cager acquired by the locals, fulfilled his position as guard very well. He brought the ball through the hoops for 6 field goals and 3 free throws. Elliott was successful in securing 7 field goals, Kohn at center scored 3 field goals and 2 free throws, Meilahn 1 field goal and 1 free throw, Heberer—1 field goal.

Lomira scored the first basket within a few minutes of play. At the end of the first half the score was 18 to 16 with Kewaskum on the long end. During the second half the Legionnaires called in the reserves and worked hard to win but Elliott's speedsters were too fast and easily kept the score well in hand.

Zimmerman at the guard positions, and Magyar at center; Walgrins, Balthazar and R. Zimmerman, substitutes. Daniels of Mayville refereed.

Lights of New York

Helen Worden, well-known newspaper woman, has a cat by the name of Arnold. Whether the animal was named for Benedict Arnold or Arnold Daly, I do not know, but at any rate it is a highly favored cat, which has long been treated like a king by members of the Worden family, which formerly resided on West Sixty-seventh street. Another resident of that street was and is William Beebe, the famous naturalist and fish man. Arnold, like other kings, grew tired of the cream and trapping of royalty and used to try to get away from it all. His method of egress was by the window. After some time spent in seeing life inognito, he would return in the same manner. Now West Sixty-seventh is a peculiar street. On the long block which runs west from Central park are some of the most attractive apartments in the city. Also in that block is one of the city's few remaining blacksmith shops and also a lumber yard and paint shop. In his wanderings, Arnold must have visited the latter because, on one occasion, he returned covered with light gray paint. Now, Arnold, in his natural state, is a black cat. When, therefore, a member of the Worden family saw a gray animal crouched on the window sill, the natural thing to do was to throw a pitcher of water at it. Instantly at such treatment and at not being recognized in his own domain, Arnold departed and was not seen for three days. By this time some of the paint had worn off.

Being treated royally, Arnold was scarcely to blame for getting the idea that anything he desired was his right of birth. It happened that Mr. Beebe, either on his trips to the Galapagos islands, his descents to the bottom of the sea or on some of his other wanderings, had collected a number of rare fish with weird eyes, fins and tails. These he had in small aquariums in his apartment. In a highly mysterious manner, these fish began to disappear. The story goes that one day Mr. Beebe happened to see Arnold put a paw in his mouth and discharge a fish bone from his throat. There was a bit of controversy over the matter, which may be one reason that Arnold and the Wordens moved to Park avenue.

A woman I once knew had a cat. It was not a royal beast, such as Arnold. Its pedigree might have read, 'Stray out of Alley.' This cat actually fell into a pot of red paint and became thickly coated. The woman who had taken it in had one of the kindest hearts in the world and decided that something must be done. She had heard of human beings who had gilded themselves for some reason, dying, because all their pores were clogged. The only remedy she could think of was to try to remove the paint by turpentine. This took off not only the paint, but the hair. I never shall forget my first sight of that cat after the operation. A cat without its hair is the most startling sight I have ever seen. With a round head, thin body, and long legs it looks like some creature out of a nightmare. I never know whether that cat became normal again or not.

Thomas Mitchell has a dog named Jenn. Mr. Mitchell, who is the author of such plays as 'Little Accident' and 'Cloudy with Showers,' claims that Jenn is descended from the bloodhounds with which he once played in 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' and also that he cannot write unless the dog sits beside him. He says that when he gets stuck for a third act, the dog crawls around under the furniture and noses up the rug until it discovers an idea. Phil Dunning, hearing of the dog's ability, borrowed it while he was writing his latest play.

Few persons appear to know that Samuel Merwin, the novelist, is an authority on oriental history. Mr. Merwin has spent considerable time in the Far East and is especially interested in the story of the Mongols. One of his other hobbies is tennis.

Rockets Soon to Carry Air Mail

Motive Power Is Now Only Problem Unsolved. The development of the rocket is being pursued throughout Germany. Hardly a week passes that new experiments are not reported from some corner of the reich. The chief exponents of the rocket are Rudolph Nebel and Heinrich Tilling, both engineers. Nebel maintains that the problem of shooting mail from Berlin to New York can be solved only by rockets driven by liquid gases. At his rocket flying field, Nebel has sent gas driven rockets several thousand feet upwards. Nebel's unique rocket motor consists of a tiny metal chamber in which liquefied hydrogen and other gases are mixed and ignited by an electric spark. Control over the rocket's speed is made possible by valves and automatic control appliances attached to feed pipes. Tilling is an advocate of the power-rocket, which he claims is more reliable. Only recently he shot rockets

JAPS CAPTURE CHINESE "SPIES"

How It Started By Jean Newton

WHY IS IT "BOULEVARD"? THE English word "boulevard" which we know to be practically synonymous with "avenue" is a corruption of the German "Bollwerk" which is a cognate of our "bulwark," and originally indicated the site of ancient fortifications. A story in a nutshell—but what, you may reasonably inquire, have fortifications to do with "avenue"? Therein lies the story of the age-long press of humans to escape their confines—the eternal struggle for elbow-room. Most ancient fortifications took the form of a wall which encircled the city. As the population grew, the overflow settled beyond the walls, which had to be removed, leaving a lane through a crowded quarter, this lane subsequently being known as a boulevard—corruption of "bollwerk" or foundation.

"He Is Above-Board." A PERSON known to be straightforward, who is honest, trustworthy and does things without concealment—such a person is one who enjoys the reputation of being above-board. A colorful word is this, though not upon the surface. For investigation reveals that "above-board" comes to us directly from the gaming table. Literally, "above-board" means "over the table." It was originally applied to describe so-called "honest" gamblers who were known never to cheat; who handled all of their cards above the table. There, it was presumed, no opportunity was afforded for the changing of cards or for any other form of deception. (© 1932, Bell Syndicate.)—WNU Service.

The Kitchen Cabinet

Hot Cross Buns.—Beat one egg slightly, add three tablespoonsful of corn oil, one-fourth cupful of sugar, one-half yeast cake dissolved in one-fourth cupful of lukewarm water, add the scalded milk (using one cupful) to the egg mixture and when cool add the softened yeast, one tablespoonful of salt and three cupfuls of flour with one-half cupful of seeded raisins. Cut the raisins into quarters and place in a warm place to rise overnight. Shape in the morning into large biscuits, place an inch apart to rise, brush with beaten egg and when risen, bake in a hot oven. Cool and make a cross on the top of each bun with frosting; frost with confectioner's sugar and water.

Forest Ranger Retires After 23 Years' Service. Elko, Nev.—After 23 years with the United States forest service, Charles (Uncle Charlie) Butler is about to retire. His life over the nearly quarter of a century he has been employed in the service is filled with incidents, showing that Uncle Charlie did everything from teaching young maidens to cook and find them husbands to dodging "mail-order" brides. Charlie Butler has helped care for 14 widows, 17 orphans and taught nine young ladies the art of cooking and "saw that they got husbands when they became properly trained." His service for the department took him over approximately 80,500 miles on horseback, about 3,500 by car, and 2,500 miles on foot. During that time he counted 800,000 sheep and 230,000 cattle. He has entertained over 42,000 people at his station. We are our own aptest deceiver. Determination makes for success.

equipped with parachutes high into the skies. After reaching the treetop apex, the parachutes opened automatically and the rockets descended slowly to the ground. Tilling built a rocket to resemble a passenger carrying rocket. It even placed miniature passengers in it and then sent it up several thousand feet. Now he has announced a still further development of his theory. After successfully shooting one of his power rockets 18,000 feet high, he has now constructed a giant mail-carrying projectile which he intends to hurl from a spot on the German North sea coast near Hamburg to the island of Wango, a distance of nearly five miles. The rocket is about four feet long and carries a powder load of thirteen pounds which is calculated to burn up in one and a half minutes, in which time the rocket is to travel the five miles of ocean. Hit of a good story well told is half spoiled by some one, at once, poorly telling a poor one.

IMMERSE an ink-stained handkerchief in milk immediately after it has been stained, allow it to soak, and the ink will disappear. Prunes should always be prepared without sugar, but a pinch of salt should be added to each pound of prunes. Wash the prunes in warm water, then cover with cold water and set on the back of the range over night. Prunes should not boil. When making marmalade grease the preserving pans well with butter and the marmalade will never burn; also skim well. This makes the preserve beautifully clear. I knew what to give him for his colds and his feverish, upset spells because Mother used California Fig Syrup with all of us as children. I have used it freely with my boy and he loves it. It always fixes him up, quick."

In many homes, like this, the third and fourth generations are using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup because it has never failed to do what is expected of it. Nothing so quickly and thoroughly purges a child's system of the souring waste which keeps him cross, feverish, headachy, bilious, half-sick, with coated tongue, bad breath and no appetite or energy as long as it is allowed to remain in the little stomach and bowels. Fig Syrup gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act as Nature intends them to do, and helps build up and strengthen weak, pale and underweight children. Over four million bottles used a year shows its popularity. The genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years, always bears the word "California."

SYNOPSIS

Acting in good faith in an effort to aid a neighbor, Ruth Ingraham, in a business way, Edward Patterson, cashier of the Chicago agency of a life insurance company, is wrongfully suspected by his wife Julia, of infidelity. Her accusation, in a letter from a summer resort, wounds him for business, and he takes a short vacation. On his return he is deeply wounded by his daughter, Edith, telling him his personal belongings were in the "study room," having been removed from the room which had been his and his wife's bedroom. Patterson accepts the situation as proof of his wife's belief in his guilt. Edith, seventeen years old, is worried over the estrangement of her parents. Her mother only partly succeeds in her efforts to comfort her. The son, Edward, Junior, is at college. A business matter brings an "inventor," James Mariner, into Patterson's life. Mariner needs a loan, with which to push his invention, an automobile clock, and Patterson is interested.

Edward wasn't so very late getting home that night. Even Edith hadn't yet gone to bed, though Julia had been trying, apparently, to send her. He said hello to both of them and realized after he'd spoken that they found something new in his greeting. Indeed, to his own ear his voice had sounded a little different. As a matter of fact he'd come walking in without having stopped to brace himself for the ordeal, to prepare an attitude.

He was pleasantly aware that Julia was wondering about him even after she'd pretended to go back to her room. It would be a queer turn of events if after all Julia should find herself the wife of a rich man. She might be willing to forget her grievance on those terms.

If Mariner proved to be right in his conservative calculations, success was a sheer probability. But suppose the other thing? What if, after Edward had put in his six thousand dollars, the calculations turned out to be wrong? What if the device didn't work? That six thousand was the fruit of uncounted small sacrifices, legitimate measures foregone, imagine it went away for nothing but an idiotic gamble on the word of a fanatic. Well, there was a certain angry satisfaction in that, too. It would serve Julia right. She'd driven him to it. Anyhow, he slept soundly that night, untroubled by dreams.

He walked into the office the next morning with an agreeable sense of detachment which took the sting from the thought of their nickname for him. At eleven o'clock he told Miss Whiting at the counter that he was going out. He wouldn't be back, he thought, till after lunch. It pleased him to note that he puzzled her just as last night he had puzzled Julia. It had been his meek habit to explain his goings out. This time he offered no explanation whatever.

A sense of adventure went with him. He felt like a pioneer. The address Mariner had given had been meaningless to him. He had had no idea in what part of town the streets were on what corner the little factory stood. It was a strange city he found himself riding through. What a deeply rattled life he'd lived, to be sure! But he was out of the ruts now, beating a new path. His fellow-passengers in the street car seemed different to him from the sort of people he'd moved among; more interesting, more human, somehow. He wondered where they were going, what sort of errands they were bound upon.

The street where Mariner had told him to get off was one predominantly of little houses, rather dingy, most of them falling somewhat even from their former modest estate. The factory was at the west end of the street where it was cut off by a railroad embankment. It was a modest little two-story, red brick building; old, and if he remembered rightly, most of the time vacant. Evidently it had been built out here ahead of its time. He found himself seeing it as it would look when it should be freshly painted; the windows washed; new lights of glass in the occasional broken panes. Down at the side there was a loading platform, wagon high, and through the big door that gave upon it, he could see the well of the freight elevator. Raw material went in that door, and a finished product came out. The whole process of the materialization of Mariner's dream took place within those four walls. It was tangible and personal, self-contained right here.

He didn't wonder that Mariner loved it. He was falling in love with it himself. It was a new idea to him, almost a new emotion. He wondered if Bert Willard felt that way about his plant. Probably not; it was too big. He would probably scoff at this place. Edward was sorry he'd thought of Bert.

He roused himself, crossed the street again and went in through the door that had "Office" painted on it, telling himself as he did so, that he was dismissing romance and coming down into the world of cold facts and figures. Mariner was in high spirits. "If I'd got this letter yesterday morning," he said, handing it over for Edward to read, "instead of today, I'd probably have been fool enough to go out trying to hold out by myself a little longer. No doubt it's just as well I didn't."

It was from a supply dealer in Savannah, Ga. He'd placed a trial order for two dozen of the Mariner automatic choke a couple of months ago. They'd made twenty-four enthusiastic friends, including himself. Now he was ordering two gross. "You're bringing luck with you, Mr. Patterson," Mariner said. "It's a good omen. Oh, I don't pretend I'm not superstitious. The tide's turning, I tell you. I can see the little ripples coming in." Edward stiffened at that, and then smiled at his narrow-mindedness. An insurance man couldn't talk of luck-bringers and omens, to be sure. But why shouldn't an inventor be superstitious?

"I want more than your money in here," Mariner said, after they'd talked a while. "I want you. I know my limitations. I'm no good at a desk, I can't keep things straight, I can pull but I can't stay behind and push. The business is going to need that more, every day it grows. We'd make a team I think. I have a hunch that I went to the best man in the whole city of Chicago for exactly the thing we need out here. Come out in the plant and see what we've got."

Edward moved gravely about the two floors with him. He didn't say much. The workers probably regarded him as a cool, somewhat skeptical observer. But behind the mask of sophisticated middle age, the banker's manner and eye-glasses, was, if the truth were known (and it was only dimly suspected by Edward himself) an earnest small boy to whom the mere humming sound of the machinery was delightful. He moved on reluctantly from one machine in the process of manufacture in the next. Over any one of them he could have lingered indefinitely. This was real; something you could hold in your hands and feel the weight of.

With his hand on the office door, Mariner paused. His grip on the knob suddenly tightened—youth might have thought he was holding himself up by it.

"Well," he asked, "how about it? Have you come to any decision?"

"I suppose," Edward said out of a tight throat, "I suppose I really had decided from the beginning. Yes, I'll come with you."

Julia, as the days went on, continued to wonder about him. Sometimes she asked him casual, seeming questions as to how things were going at the office; or commented on the late hours he so often kept. Sometimes he was aware merely of a thoughtful and even puzzled look in her face while he talked of such things as he could talk about; young Ed's letters from college; Edith's activities in school; the affairs of their neighbors; municipal politics. Probably it did strike her as a little queer that he could talk again. The long evenings of frozen silence were a thing of the past. The home atmosphere was getting better. Julia's questions, however patiently they groped beneath the surface, didn't rouse the old defensive resentment in him. They didn't, even at random, come anywhere near his secret. She was on another plane altogether. He didn't seriously contemplate keeping Julia in the dark about his great adventure until its final and complete success. Already, though he hugged his secret and exulted in it, he felt boyish impulses to let the cat out of the bag, partly out of the bag anyhow; to give Julia a mystifying glimpse that should be gone again before she realized what it was.

Ten days or so after the signing of the agreement he did give her such a glimpse. Mariner had been urging him to put one of the chokes on his own car, to the end that he might really know for himself the wonders it performed. Edward wanted it, too, but he didn't know how to get it done. He never drove the car into town himself, and if he were to say something that he wanted it for the day, Julia would think strange things.

He thought of an audacious plan for effecting his purpose, and one night sprung it, with his best appearance of indifference, on Julia. "I've been hearing about a new thing for automobiles lately," he told her, "and I think I'd like to try it on our car. The factory is out on the north side—in Ravenswood. If you are free for an hour tomorrow morning, you might drive in with me as far as that and get it put on. Then I can go on into town and you can drive the car back." He wondered uneasily if he hadn't been a little too explanatory; but if Julia saw anything unnatural about his manner, she forbore to comment on it.

They put the plan into effect the next morning. Charlie Franklin, the foreman, came out when they drove up to the shipping door. "We've got it all ready for you, Mr. Patterson," he said. "We'll have it on in five minutes." "We'll have it on in five minutes," there was nothing about that to attract Julia's attention, but if he were to introduce Charlie to her, as he wanted to do, it would give everything away.

He told her, when the installation was finished, that she needn't take him any further. He'd go on into town on the elevated. After she'd driven on the elevated an hour from the way, he stole half an hour from his insurance business for a chat with Charlie (Mariner not having come down yet) about how things were going. He was finding it almost impossible to let a guy go by without sneaking in a visit.

Really, Julia was right. He had fallen in love, romantically, with the little factory as a youth falls in love with a girl. It was a completely revolutionary experience. He'd been conscious of an emptiness somewhere, long before he recognized what it was he was hungry for. In the uneventful course of things he might never have found out. But when sheer desperation forced an adventure upon him, it intoxicated him. The technique of habit made it possible for him, just possible, to carry on his duties at the office. One of them, anyhow, I'd like to have you see for yourself."

Bert said, but a little reluctantly Edward thought, that he'd be glad to do that. "Well, I certainly hope you're right about it, and it's perfectly possible that you are. Those things do work sometimes and make fortunes for the man who goes into them. But—" His fingers drummed for a while on Edward's desk. "But I want you to remember what I'm going to say."

"You haven't completely cleaned yourself out. Before you do, before you borrow on your life insurance or mortgage your house, come to me and give me a look-in. Let me go over your books, see how you really stand. And then listen—that's all I have to ask—to what I've got to say. It won't necessarily mean that the thing's a failure because it wants more money. I may tell you to go ahead and put your shirt on it. But if the thing isn't right, if there's a joker in it somewhere . . ."

He didn't finish the sentence. Edward got up and thumped him on the back. "All right, I'll remember," he said. He hadn't the faintest idea of borrowing on his life insurance—he'd seen enough of that from the other side, heaven knew—not even of mortgaging his house. The business wasn't going to need it, anyhow.

He got his overcoat and hat from the cupboard and put them on. Bert was still sitting solidly in the chair beside his desk. "You've been here a long while, Ned," he said. Deliberately Edward let his gaze run over the familiar room and dwell upon the vista of the outer office he could see through the half-open door. "I've come to loathe this place," he said. "It's had twenty years of my life, and I haven't lived in it at all! I never even knew till lately what it was to be alive. I do know now. I'm happy in this thing, Bert. I don't care a damn whether it makes me a fortune or not. I've never done anything! Never had a run for my money. But this thing—why, it's giving me real air to breathe!" He drew in a great lung breath and then shut down the window. "Come along to lunch," he said.

They went on by tacit understanding and a little self-consciously to talk of other things. It was not until they had finished luncheon that Bert turned back to the topic of his friend's great adventure.

"What does Julia think about it?" he asked. "I haven't told her yet," Edward admitted. "I shall tonight of course, now it's settled."

"You mean you haven't told her anything, not even about the investment?" Edward shook his head. "I don't suppose you can understand why I didn't. You see, things have been . . ."

Bert didn't let him founder into that. "Oh, I guess I can understand," he interrupted. "But I've got a hunch that she'll surprise you as much as you surprise her. Julia's a darned good sport. If it strikes her as a sporting proposition—I mean, if you put it up to her that way. . . . See what I mean?"

Edward said he did, but this was not at the time quite true. He thought about it after they'd parted. It had seemed strange to hear Julia described by that phrase, but he guessed she deserved it. Bert hadn't spoken idly, anyhow. He wanted Julia given a chance to see the adventure as her husband himself saw it.

He had to wait, pretending to read, until Edith went to bed, and when the time finally came and he forced himself to say aloud the words, "I've got a surprise for you, Julia," he had already said them to himself so often that they sounded queer.

He told her the whole story, and his hopes warming into a blaze as the smoldering fire did, he gave her a chance to see something, he thought, of his vision, a thing that might come true. He didn't turn back to her until he'd finished. She hadn't put in a word, but, though he'd felt nothing hostile in the silence, he wasn't surprised to see that her eyes were full of tears.

"Of course," he said, "you were entitled to be told about it before everything was decided, but somehow I couldn't bring myself to tell anyone. I told Bert today, but that wasn't till after I'd got the letter from the company accepting my resignation. It was a thing I thought I had to decide for myself. I don't, altogether, understand it myself—why I felt that way. I mean—so I doubt if I can make you understand at all."

"But I can understand it," she told him. "I've driven you to it, Ned! That's why you did it." He answered automatically, "Not at all," and then broke off short in his denial. "Oh, it's true in a way," he conceded after a reflective pause. "If we'd been happy as we used to be . . . if I'd had anything much to lose, I suppose I'd have held back. But what really drove me to it was my job with the insurance company. That's been a failure, Julia. You've seen that yourself. A safe, industrious failure. Well, we aren't safe any more. I believe the thing will succeed, but I don't think Bert does. Even Mariner doesn't pretend it's a sure thing."

He got up from his chair and came toward her. "We haven't thrown away our safety for nothing, though," he said. "That's what I want you to see. We've got some sort of a hope in exchange for it."

"Well, we needed it," she told him. She rose too and came to meet him. Awkwardly and with a visible effort she put her arms around his neck. "Here's hoping," she said, and kissed him.

His heart leaped up, and sank again, in the very instant that their lips met. What he had momentarily hoped from that kiss was not there. They hadn't said what he had wildly believed they were going to say. Almost imperceptibly she had withdrawn.

Her arms were still around his neck. Upon that knife-edge of possibility he might have pulled her close again and kissed her once more, and in that wordless appeal he might have packed everything he wanted. It was at the bidding of something quicker than thought that he let her go instead, and turned away.

He wouldn't ask for anything that wasn't offered. When he had succeeded, justified his adventure, perhaps she'd come to him.

QUALITY SINCE 1833

The plant physiology department of the University of California has found it possible to discard soil as a bed for raising crops. Water may be used instead and the results are far more uniform and reliable, with bumper crops the rule.

The necessary elements of plant food are dissolved in shallow tanks of water wherein the plants are suspended. Drought then becomes a matter of no moment, as a small well will supply water for ten acres of cheap concrete tanks.

The plants, with roots in the water, of themselves and deserve it.

Cobra Worshipers Hold Deadly Reptile Sacred

Every year the dreaded cobra is responsible for the death of many thousands of persons in India, but so sacred is the snake considered that it is difficult to get the Hindu to assist in killing one.

In many Hindu houses these deadly reptiles have regular homes, and are daily fed with milk, and solemnly worshipped morning and evening.

At a place known as Subramanyam, cobras are to be found in practically every house, and on certain festival occasions special services are held in their honor in the temple, thousands gathering from long distances to participate.

Although at any moment some member of the households harboring the snakes might accidentally be bitten—which means certain death—no one dare destroy the cobra on account of its sanctity.

Even where the living snake is not worshipped images of the cobra, carved in stone, are common, and in the early morning one can frequently see men and women offering gifts before these "snake shrines."

Took Name From Castle

The name "Hobenzollern" is derived from Castle Zollern, the ancestral home of the family. The name literally interpreted, therefore, means High Zollern.

If you fear making a mistake you won't make it. Mistakes are made when you are not thinking of them.

It's common sense

What doctors all agree that your body needs Vitamin's, it's common sense to see that you get them. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil contains both Vitamins A and D in guaranteed potency. Vitamin A builds resistance to winter colds. Vitamin D aids growing children in the development of bones and teeth. This emulsion has no fishy flavor. Men and women find it a pleasing, palatable way of taking cod liver oil. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J., Sales Representatives, Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc., New York.

Old Water Main

Labores unearthed part of a wooden water main, at least a century old, in Springfield, Mass. The conduit was fashioned from hollowed pine logs, about ten inches in diameter. The inside of the logs were charred, apparently to keep the taste of pine sap from the water.

Wrong About Sports

The American attitude toward sport is wrong. We are the only people in the world who make sport a business.—American Magazine.

Your home town's history is always interesting; and any old-timer who knows a little of it should contribute to the annals.

All that sweet music at the movies makes you overlook how unreasonable some of the incidents are.

Mrs. Granville Fortescue and her daughter, the wife of Lieut. Thomas H. Massie, U. S. Navy, are two of the central figures in a murder in Honolulu. Mrs. Fortescue, who is a niece of Alexander Graham Bell, and her son-in-law, Lieut. Massie, together with Alexander Jones, an enlisted man, are held for the slaying of Joseph Kawahawa, one of five Hawaiian natives charged with a serious crime against Mrs. Massie. After the jury disagreed, Kawahawa's body was found in a car in which Mrs. Fortescue and Lieut. Massie were riding.

Nobody Loves a Policeman!

That's an old saying but it isn't true, any more. At least, it hasn't been true since F. O. Alexander added "Finney of the Force" to the list of famous comic strip characters. For "Finney," with his twinkling humor and his shrewd comment on people and the common everyday events of life, is a lovable character, as thousands of newspaper readers who have followed him through his various adventures will testify.

The shoe industry of this country was begun in 1630 by Thomas Board, who came over on the Mayflower on his third voyage and brought hides for making shoes. Unmeasured Winds

The strongest winds are those of tornadoes and have never been measured. Plausible estimates based on the effects of these storms run up to 400 or 500 miles an hour in some cases. The strongest winds ever measured instrumentally blew at the summit of Mount Washington, N. H., January 11, 1878. The indicated velocity was 180 miles an hour, but certain necessary corrections reduce this to about 140 miles an hour.

New Fireproof Wood
One of the most important uses to which straw has been put is that of making a new kind of wood called solomite. The straw is compressed under a pressure of 200 pounds to the square inch, in a machine which interlaces it with wire. The machine turns out four thousand square feet of board a day, and a remarkable feature of the wood is that it is fire proof.

Men and the Truth
Men in all ways are better than they seem. They like flattery for their own. It is a foolish cowardice which keeps us from trusting them and speaking to them rude truth.—Emerson.

Large Newspaper Collection
What is said to be the largest collection of newspapers in the world has been opened to the public in a newspaper museum at Aix-la-Chapelle, Germany. Among its collection of 150,000 newspapers are curiosities from all over the world, including an Eskimo paper from the middle of last century.

No More in Life
When he is pushing his first around in a perambulator, he looks happy enough, but twenty years later when he is taking the wife's pet poodle around the block for an airing you don't have to ask him—his looks fairly shout that he wishes he had remained a bachelor.—Kansas City Star

Not So Slow
Fitted with a dictaphone, the saloon car used by an inspector of London tea-shops is an office on wheels. He dictates into the machine while going his rounds, and when he is making his inspections his driver transcribes the notes on a portable typewriter.

Durand—The body of Mrs. George Gramp, 49, estranged wife of a farmer of this community, was found in a stable on the farm of Mike Wachter, here. Her face and skull were crushed and evidence indicated that she had been beaten to death in a nearby ravine. Wachter and his hired man, Al Black, held by authorities on an open charge, both denied knowledge of the crime.

Madison—Dark haired Jennie Justo, vivacious "queen of bootleggers," pleaded guilty to violation of the prohibition laws in federal court here and was sentenced to six months in the Milwaukee house of correction. Miss Justo, a former student at the University of Wisconsin, catered particularly to the campus trade and her home was the reputed rendezvous for many a collegiate "whooper" party.

Racine—Thomas M. Kearney, 75, general counsel of the Nash Motor company and widely known state democratic leader, died unexpectedly Jan. 24 of heart disease. In 1896 he was elected district attorney of Racine county and for several years was chairman of the state democratic convention. After his defeat in 1916 for nomination as a candidate to the United States senate he retired from active politics.

Madison—Counties in temporary need of money with which to pay current and ordinary expenses may solicit temporary loans under the terms of a bill signed by Gov. La Follette. Hereafter the law on temporary borrowing applied only to municipalities. Under the terms of the bill a county may borrow as much as the county board deems necessary to its safety and interest. Such money may also be used to pay maturing interest on the county's funded indebtedness.

Madison—The Groves unemployment insurance bill has gone to Gov. La Follette for final approval after being passed by both houses of the legislature. The measure is to become compulsory July 1, 1933. If enough employers had not already adopted similar systems voluntarily to provide benefits for 175,000 of the workers potentially eligible to benefits under the Groves plan. Maximum benefits would be $16 a year, paid in not more than 10 weekly installments of $3 or 50 per cent of the workers average weekly wage, whichever is the higher. Workers might receive an additional $1 benefit each week by attending school during time of unemployment.

Madison—Motorists must have their 1932 license plates by Feb. 1 or be prepared to show that they have applied for them. The legislature sought to grant a month's extension, but it has been ruled by the attorney general's office that the legislature is powerless to alter the provisions of the statutes by resolution.

Hill, chairman of the department of agriculture and markets, announced Jan. 11 that an order would be sent out soon rescinding the regulations on the grading of eggs in conformance with a legislative resolution asking that this be done. Madison—The Wisconsin statute giving the public service commission discretionary power to assess costs of utility investigations upon utilities examined has been affirmed by the state supreme court. This law, enacted in 1931, provided the financial and other means of closer supervision and stricter regulation of utilities in this state than ever before. The lower court finding that it was unconstitutional, was regarded by the commission as a threat against the entire system of utility regulation. The attack on the law was instituted by the Wisconsin Telephone company, which is expected to appeal the case to the United States supreme court.

The Goodland bill levies a surtax of 50 per cent the normal rate on incomes and on corporations on the basis of the three year average; it increases the inheritance taxes 50 per cent for 1931 and 1932, and provides that the receipts of any chain store bill that is passed later shall be used for unemployment relief. The effect of the bill is to increase the normal 1931 income and corporation taxes 50 per cent. It does not tax dividends received from Wisconsin corporations.

Madison—Large gains during November and December brought the total 1931 export of Wisconsin dairy stock to 56,522 head, six per cent more than in 1930. The number of cattle imported last year was 5,519 head, about two-thirds of 1930 imports. Most cattle shipped into Wisconsin are breeding stock.

PRESIDENT'S CREDIT PROGRAM GOES FAST

Reconstruction Bill Pushed Through Congress.

Washington—Overwhelming senate approval of the reconstruction corporation measure signaled a general advance for the entire Presidential program of economic legislation.

The $2,000,000,000 reconstruction unit passed the senate 63 to 8, with only few amendments attached to it. Already in the house, in the form of a companion bill, the project was being rushed ahead rapidly.

Without missing a beat the senate turned to take up No. 2 in President Hoover's list: The bill to increase the capital of federal land banks by $100,000,000. It already has passed the house.

Committees pushed forward their hearings on the other economic bills, among them a new one to set up a $150,000,000 corporation to release deposits in insolvent banks. This is strongly supported.

True to its promise, the senate reached its passing vote over some vigorous vocal opposition, and an enormous extent of debate on proffered amendments which would have extended the aid of the reconstruction corporation to almost every endeavor requiring cash. One of the most important of the defeated changes would have turned a portion of the corporation's capital over to cities in fiscal difficulties. New York's Mayor Walker was a leading instigator in this, but the administration had no difficulty in obtaining support in both parties to beat the plan.

One of the amendments which went through was an unrelated "fider" providing $50,000,000 which the Agriculture department would lend to farmers. Senator Smith (Dem., S. C.) tacked it on. Loans to state and state-controlled rural credit systems were refused.

Senator Carey of Wyoming took care that the senate should stay right with the administration program by having adopted, right after passage of the reconstruction bill, a resolution to take up the farm loan measure ahead of anything else.

The senate did a lot of talking about the corporation's probable personnel, taking note that Secretary Mellon will be one of the ex-officio members, together with the governor of the federal reserve board and a farm loan commissioner. Four other men were to be appointed by the President to the corporation's directorate.

Head of Closed Bank Ends Life by Poison

Metropolis, Ill.—William A. Lafont, president of the Union State Bank of Dowell, Ill., who was charged with embezzlement following the closing of the bank, committed suicide in an automobile here by drinking poison.

A warrant had been issued for Lafont at Dowell charging he had obtained $5,500 on a check and continued to carry that amount as cash on the bank's books after the bank failed to open.

State's Attorney Fletcher Lewis, however, said the institution was in sound condition, and the closing was to permit a thorough check. Lewis said the bank carried $24,500 in unsecured notes signed by Lafont.

DAWES STANDING BY PRESIDENT HOOVER

Calls Intimation He Doesn't Support Him "Insult."

Chicago.—In a statement highly complimentary to President Hoover, complimentary of the union of both political parties on constructive efforts, and encouraging on the business outlook, Gen. Charles G. Dawes answered those "seeking to read petty political significance out of my return to Chicago."

He had announced several days before that he would resign as ambassador to Great Britain after the disarmament conference.

"I cherish for President Hoover the highest admiration and deepest affection," the general said. "Any intimation to the effect that in any possible way or under any possible contingency he will not have my loyal and entire support is an insult to me."

"My last visit to this country was in July. I came back to find the people risen above partisan politics. They will remain above them. I find both the Republican party and the Democratic party united in a determination to balance the national budget and limit global expenditures. I find both parties and all the people standing behind a legislative program of reconstruction, which is a common sense program."

"It is based upon an old-fashioned idea that our government should always raise the money to pay its expenditures and not borrow it."

"As for President Hoover, whatever may be temporary political reactions—and they are unimportant in such times—he has made a record in Presidential initiative and constructive accomplishment unparalleled in the economic history of this nation or of any other. He has done this without faltering and without discouragement."

"Economically, this country generally has started on the upgrade; we have passed the bottom. The American people, with indomitable spirit, have resumed their onward march."

O. W. HOLMES RESIGNS FROM SUPREME COURT

Failing Health Forces the Aged Jurist to Quit.

Washington.—Oliver Wendell Holmes has resigned as justice of the United States Supreme court, and President Hoover accepted his resignation.

The justice, in a letter to the President, said the condition of his health made the move necessary.

He told the President "the time has come when I must bow to the inevitable."

Announcing receipt of the resignation, the President said "I must, of course, accept it."

The veteran justice will be ninety-one on March 8.

The strength of Mr. Holmes has been markedly lessening in late months. His step became somewhat enfeebled at times and he has become stooped. He frequently required the help of court pages or of his fellow justices to take his seat and rise after the session was over, at recent meetings of the court.

Holmes' letter, submitting his resignation to the President, said:

"In accordance with the provision of the judicial code as amended section 200, title 28 United States code 375, I tender my resignation as justice of the Supreme court of the United States of America."

"The condition of my health makes it a duty to break off connections that I cannot leave without deep regret after the affectionate relations of many years and the absorbing interests that have filled my life."

"I have nothing but kindness to remember from you and from my brethren."

In a letter addressed to the aged justice, the President said:

"I am in receipt of your letter of January 12 tendering your resignation from the Supreme Court of the United States. I must, of course, accept it."

"No appreciation I could express would even feebly represent the gratitude of the American people for your whole life of wonderful public service, from the time you were an officer in the Civil war to this day—nearly your ninety-first anniversary."

"I know of no American retiring from public service with such a sense of affection and devotion of the whole people."

Justice Holmes was named to the bench by President Roosevelt on December 4, 1902.

The son of Oliver Wendell Holmes, noted New England wit and author, he had already made a name for himself as a justice on the Massachusetts Supreme court and his liberal trend was pronounced then.

FARM POULTRY

MOST VITAL POINT IS PROPER MATING

Careful Selection of Male Big Proposition.

Correct mating of poultry for greatest profits during the coming year is a difficult problem and one that is usually conducted as a "hit-or-miss" proposition.

N. W. Williams, poultryman in charge of North Carolina state college flock, says mating poultry is a hard job for the experienced poultryman, and that the inexperienced man generally gives it no consideration at all. However, it is one of the most important jobs to be undertaken at the beginning of the new poultry year.

First, the grower must know what he wants. If he wants egg producing flocks, he must mate birds that have been producing eggs. If he wants show birds, he must use those that have the standard conformations.

To mate birds for egg production, the poultryman ought to understand what body factors indicate high egg production, says Williams. Select those of standard weight that are vigorous, broad, deep and with large body capacity. Such birds will lay more eggs and the chicks will be stronger than those from birds which do not have such desirable characteristics.

If the hens lack some of these good qualities but are good layers, use a male bird which will correct the deficiency in the chicks. No bird should be used in the breeding pen which has a tendency to be weak constitutionally.

Immature Pullets Show Poor Laying Qualities

Pullet culling proved its value in a Wyoming county poultry farm demonstration conducted by the county agricultural extension association, D. C. Henderson, poultry extension specialist of the Pennsylvania State college, said.

From a flock of 800 white leghorn pullets a year ago 133 were separated from the others because they were immature. A careful record of the production of the two groups was then kept for five months. In November the cull birds had 6.6 per cent egg production while the properly developed pullets laid at the rate of 46 per cent. In December the percentages were 22 and 51 respectively. In January 24 and 41. In February 34 and 47, and in March 46.5 and 68. Averages for five months are 26.6 and 50 per cent, showing the well-developed pullets nearly doubled the production of immature birds.

Housing Suggestions

It is necessary to comfortably house the chickens during the winter months in order to make the maximum profits.

Comfortable housing provides for: 1. Four square feet of floor space for each bird of the heavy breeds and three square feet of floor space for the light breeds.

2. A light in every part of the house.

3. A dry floor all the time.

4. An open front through which sunshine may get into the house.

5. Ventilation system that will furnish fresh air without a draft and will remove the moisture from the inside of the poultry house.

6. A warm house and the conservation of body heat during the cold months.

Brooding Baby Chicks

A laying house is used for brooding baby chicks on the John Schlaff farm, Macomb county, Michigan. Last fall Mr. Schlaff started with 1,000 laying hens in two Michigan shed type houses. By March 1 the flock had been culled to 600, all were put into one house and the other house, 80 feet long and 20 feet wide, was cleaned, disinfected thoroughly and used for brooding 2,300 chicks.

The chicks were kept two weeks in battery brooders, then were put into the laying house. Six electric brooders were hung from the ceiling of the laying house.—Capper's Farmer.

Beets for Hens

Beets and other garden vegetables are valuable additions to the ration of hens and may be fed without weighing them out. Beets, carrots and cabbages are all good succulent foods, apples may also be given in moderation, sweet ones being best. These vegetables are usually fed at noon, giving the flock what it will clean up in an hour or two. Hens accustomed to them, however, will not eat too much if they are before the flock through the day.

Flock Profits Vary

Of 214 Ohio farmers who kept records on the Leghorn flocks during the past year, sixteen of the group lost money; 60 made from 1 cent to $1 per bird; 101 made from $1 to $2 per bird; 23 made from $2 to $3 per bird, and eight made more than $3 per bird. This wide divergence in profits indicates the possibilities when good feeding, good housing and good management are given the flock, is the assertion made by a writer in the Prairie Farmer.

Shell for Layers

In some B. C. tests, it has been shown that oyster shell is superior to feeding as shell forming materials to laying hens. The B. C. department of agriculture advises the use of local product. The bulk of the oyster shell used in B. C. is from the oyster shell stacks. The conclusion would be drawn from tests that the kind of shell used has a marked influence on egg production.—Nor West Farmer.

BUICK PRIZE WINNERS

The winners in Buick's great $50,000 contest were announced today. They are:

First Prize: Dr. H. S. Walker of Akron, Ohio.

Second Prize: Mrs. C. A. Batty, Windsor, Ill.

Third Prize: Annabelle Stone, Portland, Oregon.

The first prize is $25,000, the second prize $10,000 and the third $5,000, which will be paid to the winners in cash.

Three prizes of $3,500 each went to:

Frank Darrow, Stockton, Calif.

In addition to these prizes, three awards of $500 each were made and 40 awards of $100 each.

The announcement of the awards was made in New York City, where the three judges, B. C. Forbes, editor of Forbes Magazine, Frazer Hunt, author and war correspondent, and H. T. Ewald, advertising counselor and president of Campbell Ewald Company, held their final meeting, says A. A. Perschbacher, local Buick dealer.

All answers were judged on soundness of reasons, rather than on literary merit. The final judges made their decisions from typed copies of the original letters of the contestants, not knowing who the winners were until the numbered copies were checked back with the originals.

Great interest throughout the country was manifested in Buick's contest. Not only the contestants, who numbered approximately 300,000, but newspaper and press associations have been watching for the final decisions since the contest closed on Dec. 14. Buick arranged the contest in connection with the introduction of the 1932 Buick eight with Wizard Control on Nov. 14 last. The question which contestants were required to answer was: Why does the new Buick Eight at new low prices, again confirm the Buick pledge: "When better automobiles are built, Buick will build them."

Up-to-the-Minute and Practical

- 1. Every woman wishes to be as well-dressed as possible without spending too much time or money on her clothes. That is why so many women in this community turn first to the page in this newspaper which contains the illustrated fashion articles by Miss Cherie Nicholas.
- 2. For Miss Nicholas is an authority on fashions—not the freak models and the extreme styles, but the fashions in dress which the modern woman demands, those which are up-to-the-minute and at the same time economical and practical.
- 3. Be sure to look for these articles in each issue of this newspaper and then tell your women friends about them. They will be glad to know how they, too, can wear clothes which carry the message of the well-dressed woman.

The man of action whom you want to fill that important post does not know you want him! Tell him your story in the most effective way. Advertise in The Kewaskum Statesman in our classified columns.

Selecting out of the whole human race exactly the man you want, immediately, is a miracle which we do several times every week through the medium of the classified ad.
