Mrs. Mary Harter's Son Writes Interesting Letter From Alaska

An interesting and educational letter to people of this region was brought to the Statesman office last week through our request. The letter was written by Alphonse Harter, a former Kewaskum resident, son of Mrs. Mary Harter of this village who is at present confined at St. Agnes hospital, Fond du Lac. Mr. Harter is stationed at Kaitag, Alaska, and the letter was addressed to his sister, Mrs. John Volk, nee Alma Harter, who lives at Wabeno, Wis.

Mr. Harter has been in Alaska for many years. After leaving here he served in the World War, a member of the United States Navy. Following the war he resided in California a number of years before going to Alaska. Surely Mrs. Harter and Mrs. Volk hold this letter very precious from son and brother who has been so many miles away for such a length of time.

Due to the length of the letter, space does not permit publication of it in its entirety but our readers will find great interest in the paragraphs below which we quote from the letter in part. Mr. Harter writes as follows:

"I suppose you will get an awful shock when you get this letter but it can't be helped. I had to write or forget how. I have been prospecting for the last two years but haven't had much luck so far but I am going to keep at it as long as my money lasts. I spent last year in the upper Koyukuk country but it costs too much to live up there. I went from Wiseman to Fairbanks last January to have a tooth fixed. The tooth cost me $12. My plane fare both ways was $120. I bought my winter groceries while there which came to $218. The freight charges by plane came to $151 for 1000 pounds. One hundred pounds of flour cost me $22.50, a case of milk $13.10, butter 60c per lb., bacon 75c a lb., eggs 75c a dozen, etc. Potatoes sold for 15c per lb. in Wiseman but I don't eat many.

"Game is none too plentiful. The Esquimaux (Eskimos) keep the moose and caribou pretty well cleaned out. It can get real cold up in this country. Last winter was the mildest we had in years. It only got down to 54 degrees below zero where I was, and that was about 150 miles north of the Arctic Circle.

"I built a boat last spring (1937 as this letter was written last winter) so decided to go down the Koyukuk as soon as the river opened up. It was 39 below zero the last day of April. I managed to get away the 8th of July and arrived at my present location about the first of September. I made over seven hundred miles, about 550 on the Koyukuk and the rest on the Yukon. The Koyukuk is an awfully crooked river and in some places I made almost a complete circle. But I had a nice time just the same, although a bit lonesome. I had plenty of thrills, especially on the south fork of the Koyukuk where I spent the winter. I was considered a Cheechack, that means a tenderfoot or greenhorn. Every oldtimer, native and white alike, wanted to give me advice. It got very tiresome at times. I was told time and again not to go down the south fork as only a few men ever made it but it was either the south fork or pack my outfit seven miles to the middle fork and I knew I wouldn't pack it although I'll admit there were times in the next few days I wished I had. Gosh, talk about fish, that part of the Koyukuk sure had lots of them—Greylings. They belong to the trout family and are very good eaters.

"I am about 15 miles from Kaitag but its hard traveling as there is no trail near here and the underbrush is thicker than all get out. The white population of Kaitag is two—a storekeeper and a school teacher. The winter mail is hauled by dog team to Ulatto, 28 miles, and is taken from there by plane to Fairbanks once a week.

"The Yukon is some river, six miles some places, and during the high water last spring, the highest ever known, it must have been nearly 80 miles wide in some places.

"Well, our work will start after New Year. We are going to sink some holes in the Kolyuk Hills. We used wood fires to thaw the ground until we get down to bedrock and see if it carries gold. We are both hoping we are lucky this time or else we will both be looking for a boss. I can manage for another year or so if the fish and rabbits hold out and the price of gas doesn't go up. The Lord knows I paid enough for gas last summer—$5.50 to $14.00 a case. There is 10 gallons to a case. I have a rather interesting partner who is an old Swede. I met him at the mouth of the Koyukuk. He went to sea when 13 years old, over 40 years ago and made several trips around Cape Horn. He has been all over the world on the old windjammers. He was in the phonograph and radio manufacturing business in Toronto, Canada, and went broke. He went to Chicago and went into business again. His backer was head of a five million dollar corporation. Today he is up here looking for a paystreak and his backer is in Chicago on relief. He doesn't worry about anything. After we got his cabin built and everything moved in he says he was sitting pretty—a good warm cabin and good enough for a year. We each built our own cabin about 100 yards apart so there is no danger of cabin fever.

"Well, enough of this gas. How are you and Ma? I heard she was up with you. And how is everybody else? Maybe we are all getting old although I haven't felt old age creeping up on me so far. I can see a gray hair here and there by looking close but I had those since the war. I dread opening a letter from home. Almost every one for the last few years told of someone dying."

Mr. Harter goes on with his letter asking personal questions, etc., about his family and friends and then closes with "Yours, Al."

day with Kewaskum opening up at Grafton. Grafton already has two victories over the locals from the first half but the boys are set to turn the trick. Grafton started slow but has developed into one of the fastest if not the best in the league. In the last two games Robel allowed only one run in each contest while his mates have pounded the pill hard. The Kewaskum team is determined to redeem their poor first half showing in this half and move to the top of the standings. They will be out to give Grafton all the battle they're looking for. Customers Can't Enter This Store But This 'Merchant Prince' Thrives

North Carolinian Runs a Department Store Although He'd Sooner Gossip With His Neighbors

IVANHOE, N. C.—Charles R. Corbett, Ivanhoe's "merchant prince," is getting along all right though he hasn't had a customer in his store for five years. What's more, they can't get in!

"I reckon most storekeepers would make fun of my place," says Charles R. Corbett, the merchant prince of Ivanhoe, "but my system suits me and my customers." Corbett prefers to sit on his front porch and talk.

Winifred's Kitchen Is Cheerful Place For Work or Rest

By BETTY WELLS Winifred's kitchen is the cheeriest place. It has all the conveniences, that's true, but some way it manages to seem so much more friendly and hospitable than the usual starkly glaring kitchens.

That green and white checked linoleum is one reason. And the light crisp green walls do their share, too. But we think the yellow curtains have the most to do with it.

The kitchen chairs have their backs and seats slip-covered with this same red printed cotton with five-inch pleated skirts all around. Yellow oil cloth covers table and cupboard work surfaces and the shelves are all painted yellow.

It's a big kitchen with room in one corner for a rocker and a round braided rug. "Just for old time's sake," laughed Winifred, "though I must say it's a nice place to sit and sew, read or rest, while I'm waiting for something to cook that I can't really leave."

We liked Ethel's kitchen, too. It's quite different from Winifred's—no thirty years ago Corbett opened his little store in this village of a half-dozen houses, off the main highway. His stock steadily increased in helter-skelter fashion, until one day a young boy assistant pulled something from the bottom of the pile. Down tumbled a bewildering stack of merchandise.

"Gosh," he said, "how'll we ever get it back?" "Don't bother," said Corbett. "We've got too much stuff in here anyway."

So he rented a nearby structure and opened a new store, his present one. He still uses the old store as an annex and has a third building for a warehouse. But the new building has gone the way of the old because Corbett, though scornful of modern ideas of efficiency, is anxious to stock new things.

Sixty-five years old, he is usually to be found on his front porch awaiting trade. Since there is no space inside, he has his office in the right pocket of his coat. In the pocket are perhaps 40 or 50 letters, and Corbett explains that he answers correspondence when the notion strikes him. New letters are stuck on the inside of the batch in his pocket and he gradually works them out.

"I reckon a lot of storekeepers would make fun of my place," he philosophizes, "but my system suits me and my customers. Folks have got sort of used to my way of doing things, and I believe a change would worry 'em almost as much as 'twould worry me. What's the use of wasting a lot of time arranging stock and keeping things in order when you can set out on the porch and talk to your neighbors?"

When Old Mr. Toad saw Mr. Blacksnake and turned his back on Buster Bear and the fine dinner to which Buster Bear had invited him, he had but just one idea in his head, and that was to get out of sight of Mr. Blacksnake as soon as possible. He forgot to ask Buster Bear to excuse him. He forgot that he was tired and hot. He forgot all the pride with which he had been so puffed up. He forgot everything but the need of getting out of sight of Mr. Blacksnake as soon as ever he could.

But he had to stop after a while. You see, his legs were so tired they just wouldn't go any longer. And he was so out of breath that he wheezed. He crawled under a big piece of bark and there he lay flat on the ground and panted and panted for breath. He would stay there until jolly, round, bright Mr. Sun went to bed behind the Purple Hills. Then Mr. Blacksnake would go to bed, too, and it would be safe for him to go home. Now, lying there in the dark, for it was dark under that big piece of bark, he had time to think. Little by little he began to understand that his invitation to dine with Buster Bear had been part of a plan by his old friends and neighbors, whom he had so snubbed and looked down on when he had been puffed up with pride, to teach him a lesson. At first he was angry, very angry, indeed. Then he began to see how foolish and silly he had been, and shame took the place of anger. As he remembered the deep, grumbly-laughing of Buster Bear the feeling of shame grew.

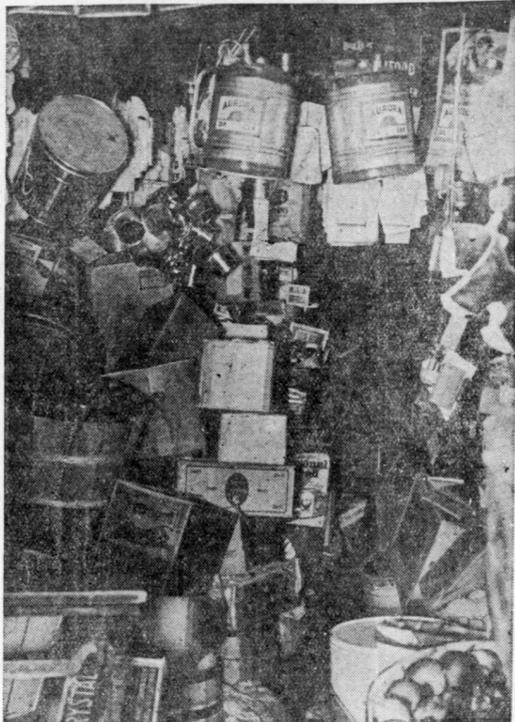

"I deserve it," thought Old Mr. Toad. "Yes, sir, I deserve every bit of it. The only thing that I have to be proud of is that I'm honest and work for my living. Yes, sir, that's all!"

When darkness came at last and he crawled out to go home he was feeling very humble. Peter Rabbit happened along just then. Old Mr. Toad opened his mouth to speak, but Peter suddenly threw his head up very high and strutted past as if he didn't see Old Mr. Toad.

At last Old Mr. Toad gave up and went home, where he sat under a big mullein leaf the rest of the day, feeling very miserable and lonely. He didn't have appetite enough to snap at a single fly. Late that afternoon he heard a little noise and looked up to find all his old friends and neighbors forming a circle around him. Suddenly they began to dance and shout:

"Old Mr. Toad is a jolly good fellow! His temper is sweet; disposition is mellow! And now that his bubble of pride is quite busted, We know that he knows that his friends can be trusted."

Then Old Mr. Toad knew that all was well once more and presently he began to dance, too, the funniest dance that was ever seen.

You can put your finger on any item in Corbett's department store, though it may not be the item you want. Here's an interior view of the strangest store on earth.

Successive school generations graduated and grew up, and their younger brothers and sisters took their places. The "founding fathers," still young folks, began to have influence in the community. They secured a plot of land, which has been developed into a neat little park. A lumber company donated building materials, WPA labor was secured, and presently the Bughouse laboratory moved into its new quarters, and added to its title the more formal style of Washington Field museum.

BEDTIME STORY Mr. Toad Learns His Lesson; Won't Be 'High Hat' Anymore

Keeping Up With Science By Science Service

Bughouse Laboratory Built by Children Now a Real Museum

By DR. FRANK THONE

New York.—Unique among museums in the United States is one in Washington, N. C., which has been developed and is operated in regular, full-scale museum style by the young folks of the town, mostly those of high school age.

The Washington Field museum, as it is called, is a full-fledged member of the American Association of Museums, and its youthful curators have been visiting its larger sister establishments conducted by grown-ups, to learn some new tricks of the craft for their own use.

It all started back in 1923, when a few high school students pooled their amateur collections of butterflies, snakes, etc., in a tent made of sackings. They named their embryo institution "The Bughouse Laboratory."

Instead of dying out presently, as such ventures are apt to do, the Bughouse laboratory survived. It moved into a backyard kitchen, then into an empty store building. The Bughouse laboratory became socially "the thing"; membership on its staff was more desirable than a bid to a fraternity.

Grows Into Genuine Museum. Successful school generations graduated and grew up, and their younger brothers and sisters took their places. The "founding fathers," still young folks, began to have influence in the community.

There is a full-time director, Miss Mary Shelburne, but the rest of the curators are still boys and girls from school. They pursue all branches of research and collecting, with special emphasis on natural history and early Americana. A number of live animals have been donated, so the museum is now in the process of developing a zoo.

Florida Had Wild Towns in Early Phosphate Days

Jacksonville, Fla. — The Golden West of another day, when each man was a law unto himself and the sheriff was the law to all of them only by the strength of his arm and the accuracy of his six-shooter, was not the only part of the United States to enjoy the rough and ready boom community.

Florida, too, had its halcyon days, back before the turn of the century when the phosphate mining industry was first started on the path to its present importance. Herbert D. Mendenhall of Tallahassee, Fla., told the American Society of Civil Engineers here.

Dunnellon, one of the towns where an important fertilizer, "had all the aspects of a pioneer gold mining town," Mr. Mendenhall, whose father was justice of the peace in the town, recalled.

"Only the primitive law of the frontier held the rabble in check. Everyone, black and white, carried a pistol, and coroner's inquests were held every Monday morning over the victims and culprits of the Saturday night and Sunday festivities."

Sweden's People Nordic Ever Since the Stone Age

Washington. — Even from Stone age days Sweden's inhabitants have been Nordics, says Dr. Hanna Rydh, archaeologist of the University of Upsala.

The oldest human skull found in Sweden dates from somewhere between 6000 and 8000 B. C., and is of the long and narrow shape characteristic of the Nordic. A few broad-headed people of the physical type characteristic of central European countries did migrate into Stone age Sweden, but the land remained predominantly Nordic in population, Doctor Rydh explains.

Muscles Keep Working

Madison, Wis.—Sleep is not always accompanied by complete relaxation, Dr. Edmund Jacobson, of the Laboratory for Clinical Physiology, Chicago, told psychologists at the meeting of the Midwestern Psychological association here. Although the moment of falling asleep may be marked by sudden or by more or less prolonged progressive relaxation in the muscles or arms and legs, muscular tension in the lips or jaw muscles may continue as shown by marked action currents from these muscles, Dr. Jacobson reported.

Synthetic Abrasives

Washington.—Synthetic abrasives, made in electric furnaces, where hardness and the shape and size of the grains are under rigid control, are replacing natural abrasives rapidly, economists find. Last year, more than 8,000,000 tons of synthetic abrasives, mostly silicon carbide and aluminum oxide, were used by American industry, while less than half of that tonnage of natural abrasives was used.

Why Rome Failed in Ancient Britain Is Shown by Digging

By EMILY C. DAVIS

London.—Once again the past teaches a lesson in conquest and its results.

Archeological investigation in England is revealing what written history has never explained: How and why Rome failed to Romanize barbarian Britain, 2,000 years ago.

Rome failed, says Dr. R. E. M. Wheeler, London university archeologist, because Rome tried in Britain to introduce too revolutionary an upheaval in a social order.

Rome brought a pattern of city life which was new to the Britons because it centered around commerce. Excavations show that the Britons had their own cities. But the city of Britain was bucolic. He drew on the nearby countryside for food and for the stone, iron, clay, bone, and horn that made weapons and household gear. Rarely did these prehistoric Britons import foreign luxuries. Their trade was petty.

Came the Romans, and they set about improving these people. Native towns that resisted were stormed and dismantled, as has been recently shown by digging at Maiden Castle. Disarmed townsfolk remained to rebuild their houses and become Roman subjects.

No Middle Class.

The Romans introduced foreign craftsmen to teach the natives to build in the Roman way, and foreign capital to develop resources of the country.

By the middle of the second century, says Doctor Wheeler, London and Verulamium "shone brightly on the provincial landscape." Britain had acquired central heating, dust-proof floors, bath suites.

But, "little more than a century later the bubble had burst." Another century, and Romano-British cities degenerated into concentrated slums. No prosperous middle class had developed, and without this type the Roman city plan was bound to fail.

Doctor Wheeler sums it up: Rome effected a political and social revolution in Britain, but not the economic revolution to fit it. Romano-British country life succeeded. The cities awaited the Middle ages for a comeback.

Molten Rock Destroys Early Geological Records

Washington.—Evidence that geological records of the earth's oldest happenings have been destroyed by molten rock masses rising to the surface of the earth in later times was reported to the American Geological union here by Dr. E. N. Goddard of the United States geological survey.

Starting more than 50,000,000 years ago during the Eocene age when primitive mammals were displacing the great dinosaurs, a mass of molten rock rose up from the depths to break the billion-year-old crust of the earth at a point where today the mining town of Jimtown, Colo., is located, Doctor Goddard declared.

In the intruded rock, he found fragments of these younger rocks, some of them hardly changed by their submersion in the molten mass. Other fragments were melted and dissolved in the rising mass, transformed into part of it.

These findings, Doctor Goddard pointed out, show on a small scale the cycle of rock changes that is going on everywhere. Molten rocks are washed away, deposited as sediments, then they are heated and squeezed into new forms, then are absorbed by intruding melted rocks, beginning the cycle all over again.

"Mud Jacking" Method of Mending Concrete Roads

Chicago.—Surface irregularities in certain types of paving caused by settlement of the roadbed can be repaired cheaply and efficiently without tearing up whole sections of paving, John W. Foulter of Milwaukee, Wis., reports here.

"Mud jacking," which consists of pumping sand and cement mixtures underneath concrete paving slabs which are settling, is gaining popularity among road maintenance men because of its cheapness and efficiency, he reports.

German Moose Refuge

Berlin.—More than 100,000 acres of wild forested lands have been set aside as a permanent refuge for moose. The area lies in East Prussia, near the city of Koenigsburg. It has never been cultivated, and very little timber cutting has ever been done in it.

Regulations are very strict. Not only are such obvious ill practices as lighting fires, cutting trees, and shooting animals prohibited, but visitors are not even allowed to leave public roads and paths without special permit.

Elephant Dying Out

London.—The African elephant is being killed off at a rate faster than it can reproduce itself, Dr. A. H. B. Kirkman of the London University Animal Welfare society declared here. They are being killed off at the rate of 36,500 a year. Between one and two thousand hippopotami are being killed annually in their last remaining haunts in Tanganyika and the great Central African lakes, he revealed.

TWO-MINUTE BIOGRAPHIES

VINCENT ASTOR At the age of twenty, Vincent Astor found himself the proprietor of about $9 million dollars. That was the year the Titanic went down in the Atlantic, carrying his father—John Jacob Astor IV—to a watery grave. Vincent had just started Harvard, his education delayed by a sickly boyhood. Vincent Astor is present head of the American branch of a family generally supposed to have been founded by John Jacob Astor I, the fur trader. Little known is the fact that before John Jacob came to the United States, his brother Heinrich was establishing the family in New York real estate.

After several generations, the Astors have a public spirited representative in Vincent. He is the first to show any trace of social consciousness. He is known as a good landlord (and the Astors are famous as real estate owners rather than as owners of stocks and bonds); he has taken an active interest in politics; President Roosevelt is one of his best friends; his aid to charity and scientific research has been great.

Today Vincent Astor has real estate holdings valued at about $3 millions, besides directorates in 10 large organizations.

ROUTE of the PIONEER CARAVAN of Northwest Territory Celebration

1787-88
1837-38

Historic Route of the PIONEER CARAVAN
Spencer, Mass.
Marietta, O.

This map is prepared by the Historical Commission for Northwest Territory Celebration. It shows the route from the Ohio River to the Northwest Territory, with dates and names of pioneers. Some few changes in towns and dates may be necessary, and publication of this map does not constitute any commitment.

Above is shown the route taken by the pioneer federal caravan and the communities in which it is stopping to present the Northwest Territory commemorative pageant, "Freedom on the March." Several scenes in connection with this momentous episode in American history are also shown.

Crowds of people from neighboring communities will go to West Bend on Saturday, July 16, to join Washington county people in seeing this colorful outdoor pageant, to be presented free of charge at the West Bend City park at 8:30 p. m. by the Northwest Territory celebration caravan of 37 young men actors with yoke of oxen, covered wagon, and pack horses. The caravan, which is recreating on foot the trek of the original pioneers who settled the Northwest Territory, is being brought to West Bend and Washington county by the West Bend Chamber of Commerce.

The pioneer caravan is the feature of the sesquicentennial of the passage of the Ordinance of 1787, which set up civil government for the old Northwest Territory and surveyed from the middle west prairies the states of Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, and part of Minnesota. The caravan will march into West Bend shortly after noon on July 16. A parade of county-wide representation will greet the travelers.

"Freedom on the March" will be in eight episodes and will present 11 characters. It will trace the events leading up to the Ordinance of 1787 and the consequent first settlement in Ohio. Colorfully costumed, the famous heroes of the revolution, such as Gen. George Washington and Gen. Rufus Putnam, as well as men in the ranks under Washington's command, the Indian leaders and British officers will appear. A scene will be added to portray action taken to make Wisconsin a state. This will be presented by a cast of West Bend people.

All in all, the pageant will present a stirring resume of a little known but vital period of American history.

FARM AND HOME LINES

The most satisfactory whipping creams contain from 30 to 34 per cent of butterfat, dairy scientists find.

Blooms a year earlier may be secured from Iris plants if they are put in the ground in July or August.

Milk and milk products are among nature's finest foods, and no cheaper form of health insurance can be found.

Buckwheat does best in Wisconsin if planted about the middle of June to early July, which is late enough so that there will be a good chance of a catch of seed.

County Agent Notes

APPLE CROP BELOW NORMAL

The county agent and Mr. C. L. Kuehner, fruit specialist of the college of agriculture, visited orchardists and fruit growers of the county during the past week. Their survey indicates an apple crop considerably below normal. The berry crop, including strawberries, currants and raspberries is bountiful except in gardens affected by the raspberry mosaic.

Farm orchards not receiving the precallyx sprays showed considerable infestation of apple scab. Orchards properly sprayed were free of this fungus disease. Codling moth injury was relatively light in well sprayed orchards.

FARM REPORTER EDUCATIONAL MEETING

The second Farm Reporter Educational meeting will be held at the court house, West Bend, on Monday, July 11th, at 9:00 o'clock a. m. All eligible to serve as farm reporters will be notified.

Grasshopper control meetings have been held in Addison, Barton, Erin, Farmington, Hartford, Polk, and Trenton townships. At each meeting a number of farmers indicated that they wanted poison bait to spread on their fields.

A bait mixing station has been established at the Frank Ganz saw mill at Slinger, where farmers may go to obtain the bait without charge. Directions should be carefully followed in applying the bait to fields.

Town of Barton farmers may secure grasshopper bait at the Barton town hall, on Thursday afternoon, July 7th. Town of Farmington farmers may secure the bait by calling for it at the Leo Leitner farm, on county trunk H, about two miles east of Orchard Grove, after 3:00 o'clock on Friday afternoon, July 8th. Town of Trenton farmers may secure the bait by calling for it at the Frank Ganz saw mill at Slinger.

COUNTY FAIR—AUGUST 9 AND 10

Because of the dissolving of the Washington County Agricultural society and the sale of the former fair grounds, many people have been wondering if a county fair will be held this year. The answer is, yes, a county 4-H fair will be held. The dates are Tuesday and Wednesday, August 9 and 10, and the location will be the highway grounds immediately north of the city limits of Slinger. The grounds covering more than seven acres of suitable land, the use of the large highway shop building which is available at that time, and the fact that the location is almost in the central part of the county makes the place a logical choice as a fair site.

All livestock will be housed in tents. Three 40x50 tents have already been rented for this purpose. Oil grains, vegetables, home economic and other perishable articles will be exhibited in the spacious rooms of the highway shop building.

The premium list for the fair is now in the hands of the printer. They will be available in a few days. Anyone desiring a premium list may have it for the asking. Four-H club members will receive their copy through the mail.

BEST FRIENDS

It isn't fun to be thrifty when you're young. It's more pleasant to spend ten dollars for amusements than to put it in a bank or a life insurance policy. When you grow old it becomes a different story.

Tens of thousands of men now in dire want, once had good jobs, substantial incomes, and even fortunes. They had "fun" then. They're paying the piper now. They can look forward to spending their declining years as wards of public or private charitable agencies, remembering with bitterness what might have been.

Every man owes it to himself, to his dependents and to the society in which he lives, to prepare for the exigencies of the future. Life insurance and similar instruments of thrift are the best friends the average man has.

WAGES FOR REAL WORK

President, Opposing Outright Dole, Still Looking for Solution of Unemployment Problem

Speediest ship in our navy, the destroyer McCall, was commissioned at the Mare Island navy yard in California. The McCall, first privately built navy vessel since 1921, has a specified speed of 38 1/2 knots, but in recent tests was reported to have averaged 42 knots. It carries four 5-inch guns and four quadruple torpedo tubes and is especially fitted for quick attacks on capital ships.

Edward W. Pickard SUMMARIZES THE WORLD'S WEEK

Spending Is a Stop-Gap

DECLARING the New Deal's objective is to give wages for real work and that he is opposed to the outright dole for bare existence, President Roosevelt said in a press conference that he is still looking for a permanent solution of the unemployment problem. He made it clear that he did not believe relief or public works afforded anything more than a stop-gap remedy for a little understood dislocation of the nation's economic and industrial life. In fact, he said, no country in the world has as yet worked out a method for dealing with the most acute unemployment situation in the history of the world.

He noted that public works expenditures had worked better in Sweden than in this country, because the Swedish government had been able in recent prosperous years to put on heavy taxes and pay off its borrowings. He said the Swedish method was being given close study. The President warned that the prosperity which vast outlays for rearmament appeared to have brought to European nations was unsound. When the munitions plants close down, he predicted, the nations of Europe will find themselves weaker in an economic sense than ever before. No nation, he argued, could spend its way back to prosperity by laying out vast sums in unproductive goods like weapons of war.

All federal spending agencies received instructions to launch the big spending push July 1, Mr. Roosevelt said. Funds will pour out through the Works Progress Administration, the Public Works Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Aubrey Williams Scolded

AUBREY WILLIAMS, deputy WPA administrator, aroused the indignation of many citizens, especially of opponents of the administration, when he advised organized relief enrollees at a meeting in New York to keep the Roosevelt administration in power and to elect 100 per cent Roosevelt Democrats to office. He even incurred a mild rebuke from the senate committee created to investigate senatorial campaign fund expenditures and the use of public money to influence voters.

The committee pronounced Williams' speech "unfortunate" because of his position in the relief organization and uttered a warning against attempts by the spenders of the government's relief and pump priming billions to influence the votes of beneficiaries.

Williams sent a letter to the committee claiming there was no political intent in his speech and asserting he had been misquoted.

Farmers Oust a Union

FIVE hundred angry farmers invaded the Richland Co-operative creamery at Richland Center, Wis., to which they sell their milk, and drove out seven employees of a teamsters' union. They then forced the remaining employees to sign statements that they would not join a labor organization, and established a picket line to keep out union members and organizers.

The demonstration was the climax of five months' resistance by the co-operative's directors, members and patrons against the organization of the plant by the American Federation of Labor teamsters' union. At the insistence of the national labor relations board, the creamery had just agreed to accept the union as a bargaining agent and not to oppose recognition further. N. S. Clark, Milwaukee regional director of the labor board, had agreed to withdraw charges of unfair labor practices against the company.

Indiana G.O.P. Picks Willis

RAYMOND E. WILLIS of Angola, Ind., a newspaper publisher and veteran political leader, was nominated for the senate by the state Republican convention in Indianapolis. Willis was named on the third ballot, defeating four rivals among whom was James E. Watson, former senator.

The nominee, who is sixty-two years old, has been the active editor and publisher of his weekly paper, the Angola Republican, since its establishment in 1898. He is president of the Steuben Publishing company, and, with another editor at its head, publishes the Angola Herald, a Democratic organ.

Fish Attacks Hamilton

HEATED discussion over immediate control of campaign funds among members of the Republican national executive committee, meeting in Washington, gave Rep. Hamilton Fish of New York an opportunity to renew his fight on National Chairman John Hamilton, whose removal he demanded.

With Hamilton out of power, Fish said, the Republicans would win 10 senate seats and 100 house seats. With Hamilton at the helm, he warned, Republican gains would be reduced by half.

Rep. Joe Martin of Massachusetts and Sen. John Townsend of Delaware, chairmen, respectively, of the house and senate G. O. P. campaign committees, have demanded allotment of funds from the national committee and exclusive control of their expenditure. Hamilton has resisted these demands.

Representative Bertrand Snell of New York, Republican leader in the house, told the committee that he intended to retire from public life and would not seek re-election this fall.

Italy Checks Franco

VIRGINIO GAYDA, noted editor and spokesman for the Fascist regime in Italy, declared that Italy had advised Franco, leader of the Spanish insurgents, to use "moderation" in his efforts to prevent British and other foreign ships from bringing supplies to government Spain.

Gayda said, however, that Italy approved the bombing of vessels carrying contraband, but disclaimed any Italian responsibility therefor.

Representations by the earl of Perth, British ambassador to Rome, had opened the way to an agreement to end the bombings. Mussolini was reported as ready to act only to spare Prime Minister Chamberlain from embarrassment.

London dispatches said Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany had agreed to split the cost of withdrawing foreign troops from Spain. Russia refused to pay a full share of the expense, estimated at 10 million dollars.

operated, instead of being automatic, according to a writer in the Detroit Free Press.

It may seem odd to motorists that there could have been a traffic problem serious enough to warrant the use of "stop" and "go" signals when all vehicles were horsedrawn, but London was a very busy city in those days. With hansom cabs, lorries and drays plodding their way through the narrow streets, there were abundant chances for traffic tie-ups.

Signs of Compromise

THERE are distinct indications of compromise and co-operation in the American picture, and hopes for restored prosperity are somewhat revived. The stock market has become unusually active, and private enterprise is awakening. Unfreezing of three billions in stored-up credit is expected to result from new banking regulations ordered by the President. Thousands of contracts for approved projects to cost almost $500,000,000 have been sent to all parts of the country by the Public Works Administration.

Mr. Roosevelt, in his latest radio address to the nation, said: "In simple frankness and in simple honesty, I need all the help I can get," and it seems that the people are ready to give that help if the administration will do its part.

Notable in the President's talk was the admission that mistakes have been made not only by his opponents and by industry and labor, but also by government leaders. He sharply attacked reactionaries in business, blaming them for much of the current depression.

Asserting his continued belief in individual enterprise and the profit motive, he criticized the recent congress for failing to enact his program for government reorganization and legislation to aid the financially depressed railroad industry. At the same time, however, he said the legislators "achieved more for the future good of the country than any congress between the end of the World war and the spring of 1933."

Wants Liberals Elected

MOST of the President's radio speech was frankly political. He declared himself the leader of the liberals and held that, as such, it was his privilege to intervene in state primary and election campaigns for the purpose of insuring the defeat of those whom he characterized as conservatives, the opponents of his policies.

This aroused the indignation of many Democratic statesmen like Senators Burke of Nebraska and King of Utah.

Senator King asserted the President should not use the great advantage he has in controlling the purse strings of the huge spending program. "People who have fought for the Democratic party for a great many years do not like interference in their state affairs by outsiders," he said. "I do not believe the President should meddle in the primary elections of the Democratic party or any other party."

General opinion was that Mr. Roosevelt had widened the split in the Democratic party and by his words had placed the stamp of his approval on the attempted "purge" directed by Corcoran, Cohen and others of his advisers.

For Naval Expansion

IMPETUS was given the naval expansion program with PWA allotments of $27,883,000 for the enlargement, extension and remodeling of existing plants and facilities of the navy department.

With orders for full speed ahead the navy department said that 113 projects, approved by Mr. Roosevelt, will be under way by August 15. Among the projects are power plant improvements, foundry building, high frequency radio station, fleet moorings, turret assembly facilities, improvements to ship building ways, structural assembly, electric and sheet metal shops, water storage, railroad tracks, noncommissioned officers' quarters, storage buildings and other improvements.

Mustn't Seize Hainan

THE British and French envoys in Tokyo warned Japan that any occupation of Hainan, Chinese island off the south coast of China, would be met by joint Franco-British action. The island, which lies near French and British trade routes, was bombed by Japanese flyers.

Germany is recalling the Germans who have been acting as advisers to the Chinese army, and diplomats believe Germany may now give active aid to Japan.

Swedes Celebrate

AMERICANS of Swedish descent by the thousand and many from Sweden gathered at Wilmington, Del., for the celebration of the 300th anniversary of the landing in America of the first Swedish immigrants.

From the old country came Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf with a large party, but he was confined to his suite on the liner Kungsholm by illness. His place was taken by his son, Prince Bertil.

The principal event of the opening ceremony was the presentation of a monument erected by Sweden on the landing site. The presentation was made by Prince Bertil and accepted by President Roosevelt.

Then the President presented the monument to Gov. Richard McMullen for the state of Delaware.

After the monument ceremony there was a lawn party attended by Crown Princess Louise.

The celebration was continued for four days in Delaware, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, parts of which states were embraced in the New Sweden founded in 1638 by a company of 150 Swedes and Finns sent to America by Gustafus Adolphus.

Great Polish Cities

Cracow and Warsaw are two great cities of Poland. Cracow, according to legend, was named after the Polish St. George, Krak, who killed a dragon which lived under Wawel hill, eating peasants and live stock. In Cracow is the second oldest university in central Europe, and the tomb of Kosciusko, hero of the American Revolution. A hill of earth brought by peasants from all parts of Poland stands as a memorial to him.

Washington Digest National Topics Interpreted By WILLIAM BRUCKART NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Great Wealth On Grill

WASHINGTON.—It is entirely possible that many people have failed to piece together several developments of national importance.

ly, and may have missed the significance of an action of congress in its closing days. The two incidents to which I refer are the federal grand jury indictment at South Bend, Ind., of a number of automobile manufacturing executives and the action of congress in adoption of a resolution providing for a broad-gauge inquiry into big business. The two, when pieced together, spell a sensational drive against the "malefactors of great wealth."

The result? Well, let's examine the scheme, the pattern and the prospects.

There was a period in 1936, it will be recalled, when business interests felt that President Roosevelt was preparing to follow a middle-of-the-road policy as far as government relations with business was concerned. During that period, there was a considerable improvement in general business. In that interim of time, as far as any observers could reach a conclusion, the President was relying on advice from many men in whom business had confidence. But there came a sudden end. Out of the clear sky, Mr. Roosevelt proposed reorganization of the Supreme court of the United States and the addition of six justices whom he could appoint at once. Through weeks of battle when it became apparent that one guess was as good as another whether the President would win, business men and women again became afraid. That was when the present depression began. It was also the time when Mr. Roosevelt turned away from his previous close advisers and began listening to the new brain trust which has come to be known as the "board of strategy."

As the depression became sharper and the numbers of unemployed increased with startling rapidity, the board of strategy sought means to offset the condition. The group also had to find a goat—which is always done when plans go awry. There followed then the vicious and intemperate attacks on "big business" by the trust-busting Robert H. Jackson, then favored at the White House as the next Democratic candidate for the New York governorship. Secretary Ickes also let loose his vocabulary and none can deny the interior secretary's capacity for speaking biting words. For weeks and weeks, we were treated to a barrage of words in which "big business" was pictured as beyond the pale of good citizenship and ought to be destroyed.

The trust-busting drive was not as successful in gaining public acclaim as had been hoped for. The truth is that it failed to get the country excited at all and the profit to the trust busters did not materialize as had been the case when "Teddy" Roosevelt was swinging the big stick of demagoguery in the same field of political endeavor. Indeed, this drive flopped at the start whereas the drive by the earlier Roosevelt was good politics for several years.

It was here, according to the best information available, that the tactics changed. The change in methods is the real reason for the story. Thus, it can be said that the trust-busting drive is still going on as strenuously as ever but it is going on in several fields without any apparent connection because the board of strategy has lost none of its determination to convince the nation that it is being ruined by those same malefactors of great wealth toward which Teddy Roosevelt waved his fist and bared his teeth.

Now, to put the pieces of the picture together. The first section comprises the indictment of the automobile moguls, Edsel Ford, Walter P. Chrysler, Alfred P. Sloan and William Knudsen, among some sixty odd officials of Ford, Chrysler and General Motors and the companies affiliated with them in the financing of motor cars bought on the installment plan. They are charged with violation of the antitrust laws, although how anybody can believe the Ford interests ever could or would play ball with the other two, I have been unable to see. Anyway, big news stories were carried by the press services from South Bend, and the department of justice here had much "background" information which officials were delighted to hand to any inquiring reporter. They did this in order to co-operate with the press inasmuch as the story was so sensational and so vast in scope that none of us writers here could possibly be permitted to miss any phase of it.

The other phase of the continuing drive against "big business" takes the form of a great inquiry, thinly disguised as a general study of business practices. It is a somewhat unusual type of investigation and is to be managed in a very unusual manner. The committee that will do the job is made up of three senators and three representatives, and a representative from each of a number of executive departments and commissions. And the important fact in addition is that the $500,000 which the investigation will cost will be expended under the direction of President Roosevelt.

To bring it own to simple terms, when congress adopted the resolution for the inquiry, the board of strategy was able to turn on enough political steam to force adoption of an amendment placing the funds under the direction of the President, rather than under control of congress, as usually is done when congress participates in an investigation. That action means that investigators for the committee will be able to rely upon laws covering inquiries and searches made by the department of justice, the federal trade commission, the securities and exchange commission and the national labor relations board, among others. The combined powers will be all-comprehensive.

To explain further the full meaning of these broad powers, it is necessary to cite constitutional provisions prohibiting illegal search and seizure. The investigators for the committee must be able to dig deep into private records of any bank or corporation or individual if they are to accomplish fully the desire of the board of strategy for complete exposure of all the secrets of business. When they get all of those records, of course they can analyze them and place their own construction on the business practices. That is today, by inference and innuendo, hint or open charge, the investigators can smear anything or anybody—and the newspapers will spread the information. It being an official investigation, it will be followed closely by the press and, as usual, there will be little chance for the individuals to reply. When they are marked to be smeared, they will be marked to be smeared, or unjustly. It is a deplorable thing that our government stoops to that sort of thing but it has done so in a number of instances.

Now, as to the main objectives. Every indication is that the guiding hands in the projected investigation are determined to destroy two great masses of capital. I mean, they intend to break up the combination of men and money in two instances. The banking house of J. P. Morgan and company, and the huge industrial setup of the DuPonts are marked. Whether they like it or not, these two groups are to be made the goats of the depression of 1937-38, and those on the inside recognize that it is a fight to the finish. There will be other corporations, other individuals, whose business lives will be laid bare, but the Morgans and the DuPonts are the real targets. The board of strategy believes the Morgan bank and the DuPont interests are chiefly responsible for the refusal of business to yield on many of the crackpot ideas of the professors, and so it is inevitable those two groups will be cast as the villains.

There arises, next, the question whether such an investigation and such a prosecution as has been started at South Bend will do the country any good. One ought not to prejudge. It may be that the motor magnates and their corporations are guilty as charged. It may be that the Morgans and the DuPonts and scores of others among families with great fortunes have set about to wreck the New Deal. But the question in my mind is: why has it not been discovered before? It seems to me that if there was so much corruption, so much improper influence being exercised and such illegal use of money power as is represented by those who went pushing the investigation, it should have been several years ago. Mr. Roosevelt has been in office five years and it appears strange that there was no effort to uncover these demons until the business of the country as a whole lost confidence in the policies of the national administration.

These developments have come along as the depression grew worse. They reach their climax of preparation at a time when another federal agency, the board of governors of the industrial depression in the United States now is the worst in the world. Neither England nor any other industrial country abroad has experienced a depression that has been as precipitous as the United States is experiencing, the board said in an official statement.

The power is not given to me to determine the numerous and varied facts, but the processes of deduction eliminate many possible causes for our nation's condition—most of them, indeed, excepting governmental meddling and the harassing of business, big and little.

Plunker, Plumper Vote

A plunker or plumper vote is a vote given to one or more candidates with the idea of improving their chance of election, through voting for less than the possible number. For example, if you vote for nine, you increase his chances at the expense of all the others, but only to the extent of one vote.

Men of the Mounted by Captain G. Elliott-Nightingale Copyright, WNU HOW TO WRECK A VILLAGE

Pie-A-Pot and Long Lodge, Cree chiefs, audacious warriors and veterans of many a scrap with other tribes, ruled their villages with an iron hand. They were happy, prosperous and had very little trouble. Shortly after the coming of the "red coated pony soldiers of the Great White Mother," the Pie-A-Pot and Long Lodge tribes of Crees had been given a splendid reservation with timber and game and fish in abundance. There they had settled down peacefully.

And then one day, to the astonishment of all concerned, Pie-A-Pot and Long Lodge ordered their tribesmen to pull stakes, for the two tribes were going for a ramble across the country without having any particular destination in view. The handful of white settlers became a bit alarmed, but their alarm subsided when they observed the Pie-A-Pots and Long Lodges were orderly.

In time the Pie-A-Pots and Long Lodges came across a large party of white men digging up the ground and also laying thin strips of iron or steel across the flat prairie.

"What is all this?" inquired the majestic Pie-A-Pot. "Oh, just building a railroad," replied one of the workmen. The Crees moved on into the west and when they were about a mile or so past the end of steel the two chiefs ordered the tribes to pitch camp.

Slowly but surely the end of steel crept closer and closer toward the Cree encampment and it was later discovered that the camp was situated on the right of way of the railroad. As the end of steel moved closer and closer, engineers and foremen parleyed with Pie-A-Pot and Long Lodge, entreating them to move either to the right or left, off the right of way, so that the work could go on without unnecessary delays. The chiefs stood firm, and in time refused to parley further with the engineers in charge.

Then, one fine morning Pie-A-Pot and Long Lodge were visited by two red-coated horsemen, a sergeant and constable of the Northwest Mounted Police. The argument was soon going again, and matters reached such a stage that the sergeant informed them that they had better move or he would do the moving for them. Pie-A-Pot let out a ninety horse-power howl, and soon the sergeant and constable were surrounded by hundreds of howling, painted Crees out for blood and the complete destruction of the white invaders. During a lull in the melee, the sergeant took out his watch and told Pie-A-Pot that he would give him exactly 15 minutes to move off that railroad right-of-way. Instantly there was another demonstration of anger and truculence, and the two Men of the Mounted sat their saddles as best they could in the milling mob. As the last tick of the fifteenth minute passed into eternity, the sergeant of the Northwest Mounted Police dismounted right into the midst of that bloodthirsty mob. He forced his way through it and walked right over to Pie-A-Pot's teepee and kicked the keepee down. While squaws and children howled and screamed under the collapsed teepee, the sergeant walked to the next teepee and kicked the keepee of that one down. From one to the other that lone sergeant strode, kicking keepees down until every teepee was flat. Young bucks and so-called "braves" followed close on his heels, pushing against him, making faces at him, cursing him, and doing all they could to annoy or frighten him, but the sergeant just kept right on going until all teepees were flat, and in spite of their proximity, not one Cree had dared to strike a blow at the courageous sergeant. With everything flattened, the sergeant mounted his horse and gave his last order.

"Orrright . . . bustle abaht a bit . . . On the move . . . shove off abaht your blurry business, wotever it is," all of which was his cockney way of saying "Get gone." Meanwhile, Pie-A-Pot and Long Lodge were so angry they were seen such audacity. One lone man, wearing a red coat, had literally wrecked their village. It is highly probable, moreover, that the Pie-A-Pot and Long Lodge realized that if the other men of the Mounted were anything like this sergeant, perhaps the Pie-A-Pots and Long Lodges had better not get into any more arguments with them. These red coats were bad medicine. At any rate, as the chiefs saw the hopelessness of further resistance, they muttered a few words to nearby tribesmen, and within two hours the Pie-A-Pots and Long Lodges were heading for their reservation. En route Pie-A-Pot chanced to remember that if he didn't behave himself the Great White Mother would stop sending supplies of food and flour and clothing and that little bit of treaty money now and then. "Oh well, what a day it's been, anyway," he might have said, as he arrived at the reservation.

Jury Indictment of 18 Foreigners Spurs Federal Investigation of Espionage Activity

Salmon minus nationality. You can't paint the Stars and Stripes on every salmon that spawns in Alaskan mountain streams but the American state department has been slow in taking protective measures. Although the Japanese government apologizes and offers assurances, the Oriental craft appear again and again. They fish outside the three-mile limit, but within the 12-mile limit. What many an American fisherman would like to know is why his government can't enforce the 12-mile limit against these invaders.

Government at Work. The federal government has not been completely idle in the face of this menace. Lengthy investigations were made after that storybook incident on July 30, 1935, when Lieut. Arthur H. Skaer took off from Los Angeles municipal airport to test an amazingly fast new plane. His instructions were to stay within sight of the field, but Lieutenant Skaer streaked off to the south, disappeared from sight and was never seen again. The plane was so valuable that army officials had planned to destroy it immediately after the test, saving the designs for production only in a national emergency.

In a dragnet a few days later, agents of the federal bureau of investigation closed in on Harry Thomas Thompson, former navy yeoman, who is now serving a sentence at McNeil island penitentiary for selling naval secrets to Japan. Indicted with him was Lieut. Comdr. Toshio Miyazaki of the Japanese navy, who had been a "language student" at Leland Stanford university. Unfortunately, he had "returned to Japan" before he could be questioned.

Quick, Easy Stitches For Summer Frocks

A BIT of hand embroidery for the collar and sleeves of a little girl's dress is always the smartest trimming. Quickly made stitches and interesting colors may be combined to give unusual effects.

The dress shown here is pale blue chambray. The collar and sleeves are edged with blanket stitch in a deeper blue as shown at A. Between each blanket stitch a tiny loop stitch is made in white and three larger white loop stitches at the top of every second blanket stitch as shown at B. All six strands of a six strand embroidery cotton may be used or No. 5 pearl cotton. For a dress of fine sheer material such as dimity or organdie use finer embroidery thread. Other attractive color combinations are pink marial with deep rose and French blue embroidery, yellow with brown and orange or green with yellow and white. For a printed fabric, repeat two of the strongest tones in the printed design or use white collar and cuffs embroidered in the background color of the print and one of the brighter tones.

Your kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream.
